Wake Up Kentucky

(By Elmer Gallaway)
One of the guards at Kentucky from the other day told me the average number of visiting anglers on Saturday and Sunday was about 2,000 a day. I thought that was pretty good. Then I took a look at the license plate on long rows of cars in the parking area. Instead of finding cars from all over the middle west, I discovered that practically all of them were from west Kentucky counties, say within 75 miles of the Dam.
On the way from Henderson, via Route 60 as far as the Tennessee River bridge, I was impressed by the absence of road signs telling where Kentucky Dam was and how to get to it. The only sign I could find on that trip and on two subsequent journeys to the Dam, returning by different routes each time, was at the junction of the Paducah-Kentucky road with the short highway that leads directly from the Dam. It was put up when the Dam was under construction, but it is now so badly faded it is hardly legible.
This absence of road signs is not the greatest, most noticeable thing in Kentucky. The purchase of the State's water rights and the fact that they are not being sold to anything from Kentucky. They are being sold to the State of Tennessee. The word of mouth that I have heard is that the State is being sold to the State of Tennessee. The word of mouth that I have heard is that the State is being sold to the State of Tennessee.

The Garden

In John S. Gardner's Home Saving of Seed I read the past spring garden was so expensive and in many instances the water was so high that it was not worth the trouble. I am telling you that it is not worth the trouble. I am telling you that it is not worth the trouble.
