Electricity works for peanuts! AND if you aren't up on today's explosive lamp, peanuts means a very small amount of money. Like your electric bill. It really is peanuts, isn't it, compared to most other items in your family budget.

While the cost of most things climbed during the years, the price of electricity kept right on coming down. Even in wartime, and afterwards, when practically all prices spiraled up and electricity actually became a few cents cheaper. As a matter of fact, our average home customer gets twice as much electricity for his money as he got 10 to 12 years ago. That's because his rates have been cut about in half in that time.

Historical Background Of Clay's Ferry (By Green Clay Richmond, Ky.) In 1792 Valentine Stone, of the railroad competition for travelers between Richmond and Lexington by rail connection at Winchester, on county court of quarter sessions to operate a ferry across the river between the bridge in Graves Fayette and Madison counties. The bridge in Madison County was built in 1877 and was in 1907 and the turnpike company built the bridge in service until it was sold at public sale in 1908. James C. Mobley, Richmond attorney, and James K. Baker, keeper of the bridge, toll gate on the Fayette side of the river, were were among the old bridge toll and forth into this part of the river. The toll gate on the Fayette side with their shuffling back and forth into this part of the river. The toll gate on the Fayette side with their shuffling back and forth into this part of the river.

Only what feeds and fills the settlement with unworldliness, can be a few cents and good will towards the Mexican War, General in the United Army, editor, orator, statesman and Minister to Russia (1810-1815). When the Richmond and Lexington Turnpike Company built a macadam road from Lexington to Richmond (1820-1825) the ferry and its approaches to the toll company and became a stockholder in the company. The ferry was continued to 1850 when the present steel and wood bridge was erected. It was called by the turnpike company "The Ferry" and was named in honor of the father and son who had owned the ferry.
