FEDERAL LABOR COURTS

The preservation of this nation from continued labor strife with its disorders and economic losses, demands the creation of a system of Federal Labor Courts. That view was expressed in a recent Judge Knox, "and when . . . then U. S. District Judge of the Southern District of New York.

"When labor unions countenance strife and disorder," said Judge Knox, "and when . . . they tolerate racketeering upon the part of subordinate locals, it is high time that he public ceases to listen to the emotional appeals with which labor dins our ears, and insists that when labor speaks, it shall do so . . . with a consuming sense of its own responsibility to the well being of our political, social and economic life."

Judge Knox then outlines a plan for a Federal Labor Court to consist of a Chief Judge and eleven Associate Judges, to hold sessions in three key cities. He suggests that in deciding a case, the court shall be guided by certain definite principles, of which the following are paramount:

1. No decree shall be inconsistent with any law of the United States which regulates maximum hours of labor or minimum rates of pay.

2. No employer shall be required to pay to an employe any monies other than as wages.

3. Confiscatory wages shall not be awarded.

4. Awards shall not preclude a fair profit to the employer.

5. The effect of a rise or fall in wages upon the general economy shall be considered, along with the adequacy of existing living standards.

6. In fixing wages, the court shall take into account an employer's past, present, and future profits.

7. The decrees of the court shall be enforced by injunctions, receiverships, and other legal means.

As Judge Knox says, this is only a suggestion. But it provides a groundwork for study of a proposal which must be seriously considered by the American people. It may prove to be the only way to control labor difficulties and excesses that endanger us all.—Union County Advocate.

LICKING RIVER INUNDATION

"From this valley they say we must be going. Will they miss the bright eyes and sweet smiles of old friends who have to relinquish their happy homes of long standing by order of the powers that be and gather together their belongings and migrate to distant parts.

As Longfellow might put it 'Scattered like dust and leaves when the mighty blasts seize them and whirl them far and sprinkle them far over the ocean."

Homes that have long been established around whose hearthstones have gathered several generations, and where the laughter of happy children have so long been heard will now be silent and such places will become the rendevous of the slimly eel, the poisonous reptile and the grotesque water dog.

Fertile farms that have so long produced an abundance of dairy feed, fresh vegetables and food for human consumption will be needed at this time to feed the starving peoples of this and foreign lands are to be load for this purpose forever and beyond recovery, you buried for all time under the murky backwaters of this historic stream.

Highways to be relocated and giant bridges to be built at the expense of a deborned and depopulated farming community.

Transportation systems to be disrupted and possibly destroyed for all time.

Railroads that have long served this section of the country will most likely be abandoned or rerouted far from their original location, thus destroying one form of transportation and leaving such communities at the mercy of non-competitive service. In other words the railroads will become only a dream, likened to that envisioned by an old time railroader in the following lines of anonymous authorship.

"The abandoned lines with their rusty rails
Winds on through the ancient hills,
The shadows creep as the sunlight falls,
And the call of the whippoorwill
Sounds in the thicket where verdure lies,
Shading the green of the mossgrown ties.

The night is born and the stars awake
While the moon ascends the sky
A ghostly wind stirs the lonely lake
To the wail of a loon's weird cry.
And the vines creep up to the broken doors
Of stations where men will come no more.

Midnight and hush—then a phantom roar
And the note of a ghostly bell
And an eerie whistle, while pistons gear
Their wreaths of steam . . the knell
Intenes again . . past the stunted pine
The ghost train rolls on the memory line."

Many towns will no longer hear the shrill whistle of the locomotive, the greatest civilized community builder and the school tax contributor of all times.

The "Pleasant" will be taken out of Pleasant Valley in Nicholas county, naught but tradition will remain of many thriving villages and towns such as Blue Licks, Sherburne, Wyoming, Salt Lick and many other places, all destroyed and now silent save the chug, chug, chug of an occasional fisherman's motor boat or the cawing of the crow as it winds its solitary flight across this watery waste land.

Family burying grounds to be submerged and when in after years many who wander back to their childhood scenes will put no flowers on grandparents' graves because of this monstrous inundation.

If you would not have the above situation to come true, lose no time in registering your opposition to this deplorable project.
