With the coming of summer the activity of the church in the rural sections should increase. While many churches keep open all the year around, yet there are many churches back in the country which close down during the winter months. A closed church is one of the saddest liabilities in any community.

Life in the country cannot thrive and develop its people when the church doors are closed most of the time. It often happens that new barns are built, farm houses are painted and kept in repair, while the church in the community is left to be a meeting place for birds, bats and night marauders. We often hear people speak of the great crowds in the county church in other years; but no one is bragging today about large congregations in the rural church. Something has blighted the religious life in the church by the side of the road.

Some churches keep up their expenses by meeting occasionally for a basket dinner, and a general one-day rally of the people. During that day a collection is usually taken among the people to pay the person who makes an occasional visit to the empty church. Many people are annoyed at nibblers on a chicken bone in the old church yard who would not give a dime during the year to keep the church going. It would be far better if the good women would refuse to feed the hirelings, and make them shell out some cash to help keep the services going all the year.

Now and then someone says: "There are no people in the country any more to go to church." But we also know that there are few if any farm houses that are not full. There are far more people in the country than there were twenty-five years ago. There are not nearly so many attending church. We need some good old fashioned grandmas, and grandmas, who will get some red seal lye, soap, and paint and fix up the churches, ring the bells, and call the people back to worship. Our problem of crime will increase as the church decreases. The crime is strictly due to the adults who refuse to make a church home for their children. Let us sing again the church songs, start Sunday school, pay the minister, and have him return to lead the church in worship.

WAKE UP KENTUCKY
(By Ewing Galloway)

We have with us today Barry Bingham, president of the Courier-Journal and the Louisville Times, who has important things to say. Read him.

* * *

I have a hard time restraining myself from indiscriminate boasting about Kentucky. Like most Kentuckians, I am filled with sentiment for the beauty of the State and its celebrated charm. When I was away from home in the service, I was worse than any Californian in my description of natural grandeurs and unparalleled assets. One Christmas Eve, in the deep country in England, I heard the soldiers in an American camp join in singing "My Old Kentucky Home," and in that far-away frosty night I could tell that every man was seeing a vision of a sunny paradise full of bluegrass and birdsong, called Kentucky.

When somebody away from home says, "Oh, you're from Kentucky. That must be a beautiful State," I can only answer with an ecstatic "You bet it is." I could hardly bring myself to reply, "Yes, it has some thrifty farming sections, but did you know that 97 per cent of our farm homes have no indoor toilets?" When an outlander mentions our reputation for beautiful women, I hate the thought of countering with a reminder that we also have needy blind for whom we do less than any other State, dependent children who fare worse only in South Carolina, victims of tuberculosis who fare lack of care and the third highest tubercular death rate in the Union.

It goes against the grain for us Kentuckians to mention ugly facts about our State, but when I try to be honest with myself, I have to admit that it is the facts that cause the trouble, not the discussion. If the facts were not true, we could refute them and turn the criticism to a glorious vindication of Kentucky. The trouble is that impartial gatherers of statistics do not rate Kentucky almost at the bottom of the heap in health, welfare and education just to deflate proud Kentuckians. The facts are facts. We can just deny they exist, of course, and go on singing how the sun shines bright. But if we refuse to admit the unpleasant truths about our State, the world may begin to doubt the validity of the pleasant facts we have every right to boast about. I like to think that many strangers who heard me sing Kentucky's praises during the war may one day visit the State, and that I can show some of them the glories of the Bluegrass, of Natural Bridge, of Harrodsburg and Shakertown and all that. Sweep of matchless country the pioneers saw stretched before them and called "the Great Meadows."

Would it make any sense, on the other hand, for me to blindfold those visitors and hustle them past the things I did not want them to see, the rundown farms, the forlorn little one-room schools, the rural and urban slums? Isn't it the same sort of nonsense for us Kentuckians to deny the existence of the blights on our State? Wouldn't it be the better course to face knowledge these handicaps and work to root them out?

That is the plan of the Committee for Kentucky. Their program contains two basic steps: 1, Diagnose the trouble. 2. Move to get rid of the tragic defects.

Lightning Strikes Barn In County

A barn on the farm of Mrs. Robert E. Delaney, near Headquarters, was burned to the ground Tuesday when it was struck by lightning during a storm in the early afternoon. Contents—including farm implements were lost. A calf, also was destroyed. Neighbors succeeded in helping save a corn crib nearby.

The loss was reported as being partially covered by insurance.
