BIBLE THOUGHT
THIS WEEK

Playground To Be Well Supervised

Assurance that Carlisle will have a playground this summer is worth more to the community than the outlay of money it will require when the good to be derived by the young people from it is calculated.

Under the supervision of James Bravard, former athletic coach here, there is no question that the maximum value will be had and that youths will have the advantage of expert leadership and custody.

The need for a playground has been manifested by the experience of other years and its supervision is an important factor in the success of such a project. Mr. Bravard is well known here, having been connected with the school in the capacity of coach and science and history teacher before leaving to enter the armed service during the war.

That youth needs outdoor activities has been demonstrated by the large percentage of young men who were turned down by the services because of physical shortcomings. That such activities need supervision is believed by many who hold playgrounds as a remedy for juvenile delinquency.

Carlisle is fortunate in possessing a playground and in gaining the service of a competent supervisor. Charls Anderson, of Lexington, who has been coach in the absence of Mr. Bravard, has made a fine record here and in giving away to the former athletic director, will leave behind him many friends and beneficiaries of his ability.

County Should Go After Speeders

Circuit Judge Dedman's counsel to the Nicholas county grand jury last week with reference to curbing speeders is sane and timely. So timely that the President of the United States recalled upon the people of the nation to bring a stop to what amounts to wholesale murder on the highways which he said piled mound to the end of the army discharges a year.

Judge Dedman declared to the jury here that this county is being particularly harassed by speeders and the chances are grave that a continuance of flagrant violations of the law will lead to tragedy. Why not help in Nicholas county to bar from driving the "nuts and morons" who show their unfitness by their callous lack of care for the lives and limbs of innocent people who abide by the law.

Three dollar fines will do nothing to curb speeding but rather serve to make a joke of enforcement. The thing to do is to "throw the book" at these potential killers so as to give arresting officers the encouragement they need in bringing about enforcement.

Nicholas county should take the lead in bringing to a stop chances for unnecessary deaths due to speeders. And as for drunken drivers—well, how would you feel if your child was run down and killed by some drunk whose defense would be: "I did not know what I was doing?"

Face In Front: Can't See Back

The assignment for the sixth-grade hygiene group was a composition on anatomy. One pupil being fed submitted this masterpiece:

"Your head is kind of round and hard, and your brains are in it and your hair on it. Your face is the front of your head where you eat and makes faces. Your neck is what keeps your head out of your collar. It's hard to keep clean. Your shoulders are sort of shelfs where you hook your suspenders on them.

"Your shammick is something that if you do not eat often enough it hurs, and spinace don't help it none. Your spine is a long bone in your back that keeps you from folding up. Your back is always behind you no matter how quick you turn around.

"Your arms you get to have to pitch with and so you can reach the butter. Your fingers stick out of your hand so you can throw a curve and add up arithmatick. Your legs is what if you have not got two of you cannot get to first base. Your feet are what you run on your toes are what always get stubbed.

"And that's all there is of you except what's inside and I never saw it."—Ripco Ripples.

Wooldridge Called Fox Sport Symbol

"A great sport has lost a great figure, and Woodford county a well-loved citizen," said the Louisville Courier-Journal in an editorial memorializing the late Sam Wooldridge of Versailles, a dominant figure in the fox hunting circles of America for many years.

To the many trophies won by the famous Woolridge hounds was added the Division trophy, established for the winning dog in the Derby event of the annual Kentucky Fox Hound Field Trials. The bitch, Hi, bred and owned by Mr. Wooldridge, won the cup. Division representatives presented the trophy to his family late in December.

The Courier-Journal's tribute said that "in the memory of everyone who attended a fox hunt in Kentucky, or for that matter 'in any state' Mr. Wooldridge would be remembered as the 'very symbol of the sport.'"

"A breeder of bench and field champions and editor of The Chase, official publication of the National Fox Hunters' Association, Mr. Wooldridge was an unrivaled authority on hounds and hunting. He rejoiced in the companionship of the chase, and such was his gentleness of heart that it was said of him a hound dog would wag his tail at mention of the name. Sam Wooldridge," the editorial recounted. — Kentucky-Happy Hunting Ground.

How'll you have your eggs?

THIS weather beaten trouble shooter isn't worrying about your eggs—or whether you want them soft boiled, fried, or scrambled—or if you like eggs at all.

But he is worrying about keeping your electric service flowing along as usual. If that means eggs for your breakfast, okay then, that's why he's up on a storm lashed pole.

Most of our customers won't even know he's out there among the lightning flashes and the sputtering hot wires. But he knows. And he knows he's got to stay there till he finishes. He's got a farmer up the road with an electric milker and 40 cows to be milked by 6 a. m. And there are hay dryers, feed choppers, churns, tool shops, brooders, cook stoves and lights on farms all around him.

He's doing a job that reverberates around the world. Farmers whose work is lightened by electricity are planting more. Relief agencies are counting on each little addition to each crop to help feed starving millions in other lands. Each is depending upon the dependability of electricity.

What does this kind of trouble shooting mean to the people involved?

To the farmer it means easier, faster work, larger crops, more money. To the starving it means another chance at life. To the lineman it means pride in his job. To the men behind him, it means pride in being part of a sound, business-managed company that delivers dependable, cheap electricity.

It's not an easy job, but it's the kind of job that Kentucky Utilities Company is proud of doing. It's also the kind of job that the farmers of Kentucky, who know what it is to work in all kinds of weather, can appreciate.

It adds up to dependability. When you flip a switch, you want current. And our organization wants you to get it.

Soil Conservation Notes

Two new cooperators have joined the Nicholas County Soil Conservation movement it was said by workers here this week. The statement added that farm plans were completed with Arthur Pumphrey and Paul Logan.

Diversion ditches have been constructed for Lowell Hollar of the Rose Hill community. Mr. Hollar is using the ditches in several of his pasture fields to prevent them from erosion.

Cooperators, who plan to practice contour farming this year should make plans to have the lines staked off. The district will be able to assist with this work.

Power Plant At Tyrone To Be Big Operation

Construction of the new steam-electric power plants being built near Tyrone, Woodford county, by Kentucky Utilities Company, will not be affected by building controls governing veteran housing, according to R. M. Watt, K. U. president.

Potential capacity of the coal-using generators is 100,000 kilowatts. Permission has already been granted to install one of the projected four 25,000-kilowatt generators. Application is being filed for permission to install a second, with two more to follow as the need develops. Total construction costs will be more than $6,500,000, and reflects, Mr. Watt says, "my company's belief in the industrial future of Kentucky."

A tentative completion date for the first generator is April, 1947, with the second to follow a year later. When in operation, the two units will furnish employment for 50 men, and will require 86,000 tons of coal a year, Mr. Watt reports. He estimates this will provide 17,000 man-days of work for Kentucky coal miners.

Customers served by the Tyrone plant need have little fear of floods curtailing operation of the station, according to E. W. Brown, vice president and head of K. U.'s engineering department.

The grade on which the plant is being built is two feet, three inches above the peak of the 1937 flood. In addition, a flood-proof wall with water-tight doors will protect vital equipment to nine feet above the 37 flood level, Brown explains. More than 40 of the 50 large concrete caissons on which the plant will rest have been completed. Each is five feet in diameter and descends into bedrock 60 feet.

"We have experienced little trouble with the flow of materials," Brown says. "Because of Kentucky's future needs for generating capacity the Tyrone plant had a high priority even before the end of the war. We are right on our construction schedule."
