Our young people are coming to the happy moment when they expect to graduate from the grades, high school, and college. They do not want that great title in their lives spoiled by the unfortunate of thinking their course neither do they want that happy experience spoiled for them.

Young people graduating from school, after a long siege on knowledge, want to remember that gala occasion and the fragrance of roses, the rattling of new clothes, and the singing of love songs. They want rings, pins, invitations, congratulations, junior-senior banquets, class plays, proms, and citations with athletic letters and all other things appertaining thereto.

It is the high privilege of parents to see that these young people are provided with all these things that make their graduation a pleasant occasion. It is expensive, but the expense is justified in the returns which enhance the beauty and ceremony of it all. Parents should never say "No" to their "sweet graduates." They should see that they are provided with these necessities of life.

I once knew a woman who had a hard time earning a living over the wash-tub for her large family. When her daughter came to graduation time, she ordered a ring from a mail order house. It did not have the insignia of the school on it, but her daughter wore it with pride to herself, and great honor to her mother who did the best she could. Young people are not hard to please, but we should see that they have some of the finer things of life, if we expect them to live the finer ways of life among their associates.

Tokens of love, appreciation, and sympathetic understanding of women's will help make the pathway of youth more tolerable, and they will rise up to bless the memory of parents who played the game fair with them.

THE GARDEN
By John S. Gardner, College of Agriculture

Cultivation

With the coming of summer, drier weather may be expected. All gardeners know that for proper growth water is needed in abundance. They know, too, that from now on they must depend on the moisture that has been collecting in the lower soil, if they will use practices to conserve it.

For example, while rains were frequent, many gardeners worked deeply to drain off excess moisture. They would have kept the soil cold and slow. Doubtless, some roots were cut off but the handicap to the plants was in some degree overcome by there being plenty of moisture.

With conditions changing, gardeners will note that those cultivated shallowly, inch-deep, merely scraping the surface with a hand-hoe or with a sidekick attached to a garden plow. Acceptable root-pruning should be furthest, much less cut off. No plant can operate on its roots in dry times. Such cultivating will be done wherever a new crop of weeds starts, also wherever a soil crust seems to present a broken surface that can readily absorb even the gentlest rain. Deep and frequent surface stirrings in some eyes are not necessary, but isolation against hot sun.

Another practice that earlier will be done, and perhaps once a week, is using seed on a garden to keep the weeds down. Such seed will be scattered on the level to keep the water as much as possible the distance the roots will need to go to reach water, and prevent the heat of the sun's surface to the moisture-evaporating rays of the sun. Dragging soil to plant-to make hills will be abandoned now for the season, and also to save labor.

News in the World of Religion
W. W. Reid

"It is my conviction that the question of good relations between Russia and the United States and Great Britain forever in the control of Germany," said Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, mission leader of the Congregational Christian churches, Boston, Mass., on his return from a visit to central Europe. Germany's greatest problems, he found, are those of "displaced persons," refugees, and hunger. "If we cannot solve the problems of international cooperation there," he adds, "we cannot solve them anywhere else. There is no doubt that the Germans fear Russia as people fear a hurricane. American authorities in Germany have both the ability and the desire to meet Russia in an absolutely fair way and to work out the vast problems involved in the control and reeducation of Germany without resort to violence."

"The Negro church is an important factor in the community as well as one of the largest organizations among Negroes," says the Rev. J. Oscar Lee, of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. "In the light of the fact that the Negro community is witnessing a rise in the educational level of its people, the educational equipment of the minister becomes an increasingly important factor if he is to continue in his place of leadership. Numerous studies have indicated that the educational level of the Negro ministry is low, thus the problem that confronts those interested in the training of the Negro minister is not only the preparation of those who intend to enter the ministry but the improvement of the professional equipment of those already in the profession."

Breeding Program To Help Dairying

In planning a state-wide breeding program to aid dairying, the Kentucky Artificial Breeding Association announces the establishment of a central bull stud at Smithfield, Madison county. At this time indictments are to be returned against delinquent dog owners and prosecutions will follow this action.

All persons who have not paid dog licenses are herewith warned of the penalty and those who desire to escape action should go to the sheriff's office and secure dog license before May 20.

But for Kentucky as a whole, there are about 625,000 dairy cows, producing $70,000,000 worth of milk, cream, veal and other dairy products annually. The dairy industry is declared to be second only to tobacco as a source of cash farm income.

The State Legislature appropriated $15,000 annually for the next two years for the supervision of the artificial breeding program.

Located within four miles of Bowman Field, it is possible that airplane service eventually will be used in making the program available to dairymen in all parts of Kentucky.
