Tidbits Of Kentucky Folklore

By Dr. Gordon Wilson

Kentucky Proverbial Lore

Almost from the beginning of this column I have referred to our typical folk sayings and comparisons. Now comes a representative of the American Dialect Society and wants me to contribute some of our proverbial lore as a part of an article to appear in LIFE before long. I know that many of the folk figures of speech that we all know are in no sense peculiar to Kentucky, but there ought to be some that are distinctively ours. I am going to give you some of the list that I sent in, and you may judge whether they have the Kentucky flavor.

Most of my contributions were in the form of similes, some of which have already appeared in this column. Whether often climb rather suddenly to fellow who is "sharp enough to stick in the ground and green enough to grow." Angry people may just be any angry in Kentucky than elsewhere, but all of us have seen some body "mad enough to bite a ten-penny nail in two," or "mad as a wet hen." People who reminded that some of their ancestors and living relatives, too, were as "common as cheap jewelry dust." With all sorts of cloth so outrageously high-priced to be "as naked as a jaybird" soon, even in the winter, when it is cold enough to "freeze Jordan off the cross." But this list may make you as "tired as all get-out", hence I will never enange this subject.

Whole lines or sayings also show our folk flavor. When I was a boy, we often put some upstart young boy in his place by reminding him that he "wasn't anybody's grandmammy." If that didn't calm him down, we took further pains to "settle his hash." A man who had a large family was often represented as saying that he was able to provide for so many by reminding us that "there is a persimmon for every possum." In reply to our asking some country boy what he had been doing, he sometimes said, "Not much ol' nuthin'." Our old fields were said to be so poor to produce "more") that they "wouldn't sprout peas." And some of the fields were just about thin, worthless.

"No doubt there is way to tell if Kentucky as such in these comparisons and sayings, but they represent the common stock from which Kentucky people are their customs spring. I'm interested in seeing how LIFE illustrates some of these and similar sayings, especially the one about the mud fence, as I have never seen a mud fence. I would like to go with a photographer to some of the places I used to know and get some pictures that would show what I mean by clarity how cheap gully dust can be or how poor a hillside can become through man's inhumanity to nature. Anyway, it will be something to look out for, this series of state sayings and similes.

Baptist Hospital Drive Progress Reported

The drive for funds for the new Central Baptist hospital is still in progress. Anyone who has not contributed to this cause and desires to do so, may contact the chairman of the drive. Rev. Ira McMillen, who will be glad to accept any gift for the campaign. All workers are urged to complete their canvass as soon as possible and turn in their money and reports.

»My Column

By E. [illegible]n Perrette

A little boy came into the study one day last week with me about going to the Methodist Orphans' Home. He said "I would not care so much, if only I could take my little dog along." I asked him if he would give me the dog, and let me keep it for him. To this he reluctantly agreed, but maintained the hope that he might be permitted to take his dog along. When Rev. A. Spence came for the children, and he had gone a good distance on the way, he boy said that he could not care so much to go after all, if he could have taken the dog. He Superintendent, knowing boys and their love for dogs, turned a car, returned and got the dog. I wished all the children had come a few days later with Mrs. Frank Hardesty, Mrs. A. T. Gardner and Dr. Blake Culpepper, when the time came for the buses to deliver the children to school for the starters. I saw the little black dog come up to the curb with the driver in his mouth. Another mangy dog was following him with his tail wagging. The children got off the buses by scores, and former orderly lines as they proceeded to the dining room. Several of the children started down the path the little dog, but he kept his place until his master came along, and then he fell in with him on the head. The little dog then turned and trotted off down in the field with his two home, followed by the big dog. It wanted his master to know that he was a little industrious dog, and would find two bones, while the big fury dog only stood by watching him, and hoping he would share one with him.

Every dog is entitled to a bone. But some ears are more friendly than others, and can get bones while others stand by with their mouths watering. There is nothing as good in a dog as a good master, and a good home. But he has to be friendly to get the butcher to bring the clever down with a whack, and pitch him a good juicy bone. Dogs should share their bones with other dogs, particularly if the other dogs are kind, and cannot get bones for themselves.

There are lots of people who have two ears in their garages, while their neighbors have none, but they will not share with them. There are lots of farmers who have tools which have never been used; but they do not share them with their neighbors. It would be far better if we had some tools in each other's tool house, and he had some in ours. Unselfishness is the finest art of life.

My great Joy
Is my Boy
Filled with love and grace.

Memory
Dear of thee
Fills my heart with pride
Always be
Filled with glee
Whatever else betide.

Your sweet brow
I cherish now
Your curly locks
And with this
I send a kiss
And shed a joyful tear

With the hair
That you share
You fill my soul with joy.
Grieve it,
And think of my dear boy.

News in the World of Religion

W. W. Reid

The United Church Service Center at New Windsor, Maryland operated by the Church of the Brethren Service Committee, but serving all Protestant denominations—in one recent week shipped 274,352 pounds of food and clothing, valued at $183,994 to war-stricken countries in Europe, there to be administered by church agencies. The shipments, which continue each week, included 400 bales of clothing, 250 bags of shoes and 1,104 cartons of food for Poland, 3200 bales of clothing for Hungary, and 400 bales of clothing for Greece. There are four other centers from which American Protestantism is unitedly shipped for Europe and Asia.

Concerned over the plans of Congress which would reduce the funds appropriated for schools for the American Indians, the Home Missions Council of North America has appealed to senators and representatives to give more than less funds for this needy segment of American life. The Council points out the great need for more school and equipment, and better facilities for roads and means of transportation in the reservations. The Council, of which Dr. Mark A. Dawber and Miss Edith F. Lowry are the secretaries.

The plight of the Protestant churches in Hungary is desperate today, because they had to face Nazism before the war, and because one-third of their buildings were destroyed or seriously damaged during the fighting in 1944, according to Dr. Bela Vasady, president of the Reformed Church of Debreczen's 400-year-old Reformed College, and now visiting in America. Now inflation is an added problem, he says. Protestants comprise only 20% of Hungary's population; this number include 2,000,000 members of the Reformed church, 500,000 Lutherans and several number of Baptist and Methodists.
