The largest pull so far this year was held recently at night at Carlisle on the floodlighted high school football field. Sponsored by the American Legion, the affair had of $405 in prizes drew teams from Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana. Each class carried prizes of $75, $40 and $20 for the first three winners. An entry fee of $10 a team was charged.

A crowd estimated at 1,200 paid its way in to see the event. Since it was impossible to hold the pull in front of the football stand because of a school-board paling, the ring was drawn up across the field, and strands of barbed wire were strung along each side to keep back the crowd. The crowd was lined three or four deep along the sides and ends of the 50 or so yards of track.

Teams in the lightweight class started out pulling 3,200 pounds of concrete blocks of 40 pounds each. The first team dropped out when the load had been increased to 4,000 pounds. The winner pulled approximately 5,500 pounds.

Elimination of the first team boomeranged into a near tragedy. While returning from the pulling ring, the team became frightened and bolted away from the driver, Frank Wilson of Jackstown. The team raced through the end of the crowd, dragging Wilson behind, then wheeled, and crashed through the fence. Several men in the fire on each side of the track. Several spectators jumped between the onrushing team and the wire, were bowled over by the stampeding bolters. Texas after it were cut and scratched by the barbed wire. The persons required hospital attention, but only one was injured badly. The driver suffered internal injuries.

The accident caused a delay of more than an hour in the contest. Finally, the pulling ring was transferred to the other side of the field in front of the grandstand, where the overflow crowd could be seated, and the contest continued. Only officials and those actively connected with teams were allowed on the field. So many teams were entered in the contest that it was after 2 a. m. before the final winner was determined.

Those who have followed pulling contests said this was the first accident that has occurred at such an event.

So successful was the contest, in spite of the accident, that the Legion already is planning an even larger one for next year, possibly with $100 first prize going to winners in the various classes. The pull climaxed a two-day horse show, also Legion-sponsored, during which $1,000 in prize money was given.

County Agent Asks Check On Fires

County Agent W. T. Straw, today called upon Nicholas county farmers to enlist in the fight on fire which last year destroyed more than $85 million of farm property and snuffed out almost 4000 lives.

Stating that the fire curve continues its surge upward to an all-time high this year, he urged farmers to take steps to eliminate the common causes of fire during Fire Prevention Week, October 6-12, which is sponsored by the National Fire Protection Association.

East Union Homemakers

The East Union Homemakers club met at the home of Mrs. K. B. Trimble, October 4th at 10:30 o'clock for an all day meeting. There were thirteen members present and visitors and one new member, Mrs. Elbridge Miller was added.

Report of a meeting held recently at Miss Rowe's office was given. The lunch room at the school was reported to be progressing under the supervision of Mrs. Claud Toy and Mrs. Sylvester Toy, with every child in the school eating at the lunch room. The members voted to start a penny box, each one contributing a penny a month, also to impose a fine of five cents per half hour for tardy members, and in this way create a contingent fund.

In the afternoon the project leaders, assisted by Miss Rowe, gave a demonstration on room planning, stressing the importance of studying color, pattern and texture combinations before decorating a room.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. John Barrett at 10:30 o'clock on November 1st.

Wake Up, Kentucky

One of these days I'm going to get up on my feet at a meeting of the Directors and other leaders of the Committee for Kentucky and urge the organization to launch an educational program for the creation of a State Department of Research and Planning.

Everywhere I go in the State I see people building things to meet the needs of the present. Planners reach conclusions by pyramiding noses in their communities and the designs they accept seem to be slightly modified ideas of their grandfathers.

Travel over the State and you will see hundreds of schools and other public institutions built ten to fifteen years ago that are already pitifully inadequate.

If our enabling laws are a hindrance to building for the future they can be modernized by proper legislative enactments and by a revision of our present antiquated constitution.

Counties, neighborhoods, towns, cities put up school buildings that will not even meet the demands of five years' healthy population increase, when they ought to build, both as to size and convenience, for thirty to forty years hence. And this goes for all kinds of public buildings.

To illustrate my point, I'll tell you about what happened on the Pacific coast after a great city was destroyed by earthquake and fire. San Francisco was reduced to an area that looked even worse than the bombed cities of Europe in the last World War. I was there in 1910, four years after the disaster. The city, for the most part, had been rebuilt. Office buildings were perhaps 25 per cent occupied. Hotels had hardly enough guests to pay the waiters and bellhops. Being a roving newspaper reporter, I picked a medium priced hotel—brand new but not one of the city's most luxurious hostelries. The hotel was delighted to put me up for fifty cents a day. The factory hotels were taking them in at a dollar a day, as compared with a $5 rate in other large cities. The city was far too big for its downtown population, its volume of business. It had built for the future—so it thought. Yet by 1915, or 11 years after it was destroyed, San Francisco had realized its job had been too small.

Here in Kentucky nearly everything is planned locally, often with limited courage and imagination, and by officials cramped by outmoded laws governing the financing of public projects. A State Bureau of Planning could send experts to localities to help them design their institutional buildings and other public improvements to meet the demands of several decades in the future.

From the standpoint of costs over a long stretch, such a Bureau would be worth 100 times the expense of maintaining it.

News In The World Of Religion

W. W. Reid

Dr. John Foster Dulles, layman and lawyer, Protestant Episcopal Bishop G. Ashton Oldham, Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Professor Reinhold Niebuhr of Union Theological Seminary, and Dean Virginia Gildersleeve of Columbia University, are the American members of the newly-formed "Commission of the Churches on International Affairs," organized at Cambridge, England, at a conference of Protestant church leaders of some thirty nations, and under the auspices of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council. The Commission is to serve "as a source of stimulus and knowledge in their (Protestant churches of the world) approach to international problems, as a medium of common counsel and action and as their organ in formulating the Christian mind on world issues and bringing that mind to bear on such issues."

Two years ago the Methodist Church, under the leadership of its Council of Bishops, launched a campaign to raise $25,000,000 for relief and reconstruction mostly in Europe and in Asia where the war had wrecked mission enterprises and had dispersed millions of people from their homes and livelihoods. To date the "Crusade for Christ" offices have received $26,649,099 from Methodist churches for this cause, it is reported by Treasurer Thomas B. Lugg of Chicago.

Sailor Home

Three hundred leading ministers of the major Protestant denominations in the United States have addressed a letter to President Truman asking that he extend amnesty to America's conscientious objectors to war, several hundred of whom are still in prison. A large number of denominational assemblies have urged similar action. The letter, signed by many who are not themselves objectors, says: "Sharing concern for religious liberty and freedom of conscience, we are troubled by the fact that 1,500 of the 6,000 conscientious objectors sentenced under the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 are still confined in federal prisons. A majority of these men are Jehovah's Witnesses, who have claimed that their evangelistic activities entitled them to exemption from the draft as ministers. There are also scores of war objectors who have been court-martialed by the armed forces for refusal to obey military orders which violated their conscientious scruples. The objectors who have completed their sentences or have been paroled are still penalized by the loss of important civil rights . . . It is surely regrettable that, here in the United States, men whose only crime has been fidelity to conscience should continue to be punished."

According to Dr. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the World Council of Churches, Geneva, Switzerland, "In the great struggle which has been going on in Europe, the church has gained a new prestige. For in this fundamentally spiritual conflict the churches of occupied countries have proved to be loyal guardians of the great spiritual values and, as the underground press so many institutions have been wholly or partly destroyed, the churches represent one of the very few remaining channels through which are ready for the reconstruction task."

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Hamm spent last week with his brother, C. S. Hamm and family of Sugar Creek.
