Higher Teacher Salaries "Essential" Says Earl Clements

Louisville, Ky.—A frank acceptance of the fact that Kentucky school teachers are grossly underpaid and higher salaries for them are "absolutely essential" is made by Congressman Earle C. Clements, Morganfield, aspirant for the Democratic nomination for governor in a letter to Kentucky voters.

Declaring the "obligation of the state government is inescapable" in the matter of teachers' salaries, Clements further insists salaries "must be raised if the schools are to be kept open and the boys and girls of the state are to be properly taught."

"The state" the letter reads "has been parsimonious with education on every level. As a result, teachers are turning to other professions or are going to other states and unless teachers' salaries are sufficiently high to justify the long preparation for this profession and continuation in it by those who are qualified holders of certificates, the state will be suffering the consequences for many years to come.

"The obligation of the state government is inescapable." the letter says, "the state cannot pass the 'buck' through failure to meet its most vital responsibility to youth and the citizenship generally. Regardless of any federal support, we cannot rely on these long range hopes for our children who are growing to maturity now."

The Clements letter expresses the view that the present minimum teachers' salaries are "a grim joke and actually retard educational progress instead of guaranteeing a living wage."

Citing the fact that the salaries paid are far below the national average, the letter expresses the hope that "with an enlarged tax base and new industries in the state, Kentucky can be taken from the bottom of the list in education."

Is Honest Government Worth Anything To You?

Wouldn't you like to know that the Government at Frankfort is being operated for ALL the people ALL the time—24 hours out of every day—for at least one four-year administration?

Wouldn't you like to know that the Democratic nominee, would, if elected, surround himself with efficient, conscientious employees chosen for what they could do FOR you rather than TO you?

Wouldn't you like to know that this nominee would, in the words of Andy Gump, "Wrap no man's collar", but would go into office unfettered by the machine, or any selfish interests?

Wouldn't you like to have a lot fewer campaign promises and high-sounding pre-election oratory, yet have the assurance that those promises should be on the things the state actually needs and wants and would be honestly carried out to the letter?

Wouldn't you like to see an administration of which you could point with pride—one that would enhance the prestige of the state and elevate Kentucky to the position of leadership in the educational and industrial world to which she is entitled?

A Real Leader

whose friends are convinced he is the man to lead the Democratic party out of the "Wilderness".

THEN

If these things mean anything to you and are worth fighting for in the Democratic primary next August, many prominent Democrats are confident that there can be but one answer. As phrased by Judge Howard Ellis, Judge of the Owen County Court for the past 27 years:

"Mr. Jesse K. Lewis, former assistant attorney general and now Democratic member of the Kentucky Public Service Commission, is the 'Moses' who can lead our great party out of the 'Wilderness' of political bossism."

"If you want a Governor who is honest, capable, energetic, fearless and who owes allegiance to no one but YOU, the PEOPLE of Kentucky—a man in whom your faith will be justified—I am convinced that he is that man. And many other Kentucky Democrats whom I have contacted are similarly impressed by Mr. Lewis."
