1200 COWS

time problem of securing milk cow replacements by raising heifer calves of improved breeding. In the past, the spread of this disease has been greatly increased by hap-hazard methods of buying milk cows.

The actual cost of this breeding service is low and the service of proven bulls is made available. This compares to the present situation of milk cows being bred to beef bulls. There are fewer than six dairy bulls in Nicholas county. Many milk herds are small and the ownership of both a beef and a dairy bull is impractical. However, the artificial breeding plan will enable even the small owner to raise his own milk cow replacements by selective breeding of his best milk cows to superior dairy bulls. The remainder of the herd can be used to raise beef calves for meat production. The addition of this new project will greatly improve the milk and cream enterprise without hurting the beef business. Milk production now rates second to tobacco as a source of farm income. It is recognized by the dairy committee that expansion in milk production is taking place in Nicholas county, especially on farms of less than 150 acres. The average farm in the county contains 80 acres.

Joining the Artificial Breeding Cooperative which will be managed by local men, will cost a lifetime membership of $8.00 plus $1.00 per cow. These two payments as individual has five cows that he wants to enlist. To join the cost will be $8.00 for a lifetime membership and $5.00 for the five cows. This will enable this way to breed a maximum of five cows indefinitely. These organization costs will occur only once however. The breeding service which is done by a trained technician is $5.00 per cow with two additional services guaranteed at no cost during each lactation period. The cost of feeding a bull at present will be about $120.00 per year. This service will cost much less than owning a bull, and much danger from a mean bull can be avoided.

The local committee has been greatly encouraged recently when Fleming and Mason counties completed their signups. The growth of the program throughout the state has been rapid. Twenty counties now have the service or are about ready to start, it was stated.
