Tidbits of Kentucky

By Dr. Gordon Wilson

Nothing exists by itself. That is trite but true. Sometimes it needs to be said again and again, to remind people how no one lives alone, no spot of earth is surrounded only by infinity.

Take Fidelity, for instance. We sometimes thought ourselves unique. As some wag has said in every generation since the world began, we knew that we were the center of the world, because anyone could see that the horizon came down at exactly the same distance all around us. People who lived up the creek or out in the Flatwoods or farther on down toward the river were outlanders, as our older language would have phrased it. Besides, Fidelity was on the map, but many of the country stores, especially those that did not have a postoffice, were not even mentioned. And Fidelity was the distributing place for a whole big area, where mail came from the county seat and was sent by Star Routes down to Lax and Hamlin and Hyman and similar points. And the roads out from the river, or most of them, come through Fidelity before they started to the county seat. Even people from over the state line in Henry County often came trading to our village or came down to visit their more fortunate relatives, more fortunate because they lived in Kentucky, first, and in Fidelity, second. It gave us a feeling of importance to see these evidences of Fidelity's being the center of things. We referred to places up the creek or out in the Flatwoods or down toward the river as if they were east of the sun and west of the moon," in the Norwegian phrase.

But suppose someone really believed this and decided to limit all of the blessings of this world to Fidelity. At once they would have trouble, for every Fidelity family had ties elsewhere. Out in the Flatwoods lived this distant cousin of mine who is now the registrar of Western; over the other side of the county, the south side, we thought, live dozens of relatives on both sides of my family, not to mention relatives of every other family around us. All of us had relatives that we bragged about and plenty that we did not mention first. Some of the big bugs lived among us or so far away that no local jealousy could touch them; some of the other kind lived near and far, too, and were always a bit too obvious when they walked up to us at Sulphur Springs Church on Quarterly Meeting Day, when dinner on the ground was about to be staged, and addressed us in a loud and unctuous voice as Cousin This or That. We had read of the earth opening and swallowing people sometimes and halfway wished it might repeat the trick, getting us or our relatives in the cataclysm.

I live in a big town, as towns in Kentucky go. It would like to be a city and would like, sometimes, to spread some city ways. But when farmers are scattering manure out in the country, we are still so close to the soil that the odor drifts right into the city itself. And down every street drives the traffic from the soil: wagon loads of burley tobacco (several millions of dollars' worth of it), truckloads of stock and corn and wheat and barley, and many a farm car bulging with products that are to be sold in my good-sized town. Fortunately, our newspaper knows how much our town depends upon the farms and sees to it that the farm news gets good headlines, for the rise or fall in the prices of farm products will determine whether our businesses stay open through troubled years. And our service clubs know, too, where their bread and butter come from and have lost that snootiness that once revealed town life, which felt itself above the sordid things of the country. And if you were to cut across any block in Bowling Green, you would find some relatives of hosts of country people or people from the small supporting towns, just as at Fidelity you could always find somebody's relatives in every other section you wanted to laugh at. Just as Fidelity had its up-the-creek and flatwoods areas, so Bowling Green has close by Scottsville and Russellville and Morgantown and Brownsville, not to mention Rhoda and Allen Springs and Woodburn and Auburn.

To The Voters Of Nicholas And Bourbon Counties

On August the second you are going to select a candidate for election in November to represent you in the next Legislature. Mr. E. F. Prichard and Mr. Dennis Snapp are candidates in the Democratic primary.

There is an issue in this election that requires the voters' earnest consideration. A few years ago Kentucky legislative districts were rearranged. Up to that time Nicholas county had been paired with Robertson county in constituting a legislative district. In this arrangement that the mutual understanding that the counties would, in so far as possible, alternate in sending a representative to the Legislature; one year Robertson would offer a man for election and the following two years Nicholas county would offer a man. In this way both counties had representatives in turn.

When the legislative districts were changed some years ago, there was a mutual understanding that Nicholas county which was now paired with Bourbon would alternate with Bourbon county in sending a representative to the Legislature. This was not only a recognized custom but one which was generally recognized by all as a fair and courteous thing to do. But since Nicholas has been paired with Bourbon, Nicholas has not had a citizen of her county in the Legislature.

Mr. Prichard has seen fit to monopolize this privilege ignoring altogether the rights and courtesies of the time honored custom. Apparently in his mind Nicholas county is unworthy of any consideration whatsoever. We know this situation is not due in any wise to the citizens of Bourbon county. They, even more than the citizens of Nicholas, feel the injustice of the matter. We understand that a few years ago some of the most prominent and interested citizens of Bourbon county went to Mr. Prichard when he was considering announcing for re-election and earnestly requested him to step aside and let a man from Nicholas have the right of way. Mr. Prichard refused. He is again running and asking the voters of both counties to send him back to the Legislature. We cannot but feel that turn about is fair play. Mr. Snapp who is also making the race for Representative is a native of Nicholas county although doing his work and making his home in Bourbon. He is well qualified in every respect to represent both Nicholas and Bourbon. identified with both counties he has the interests of both counties at heart. He is ideally suited for the position and we earnestly commend him to every voter for consideration.

Kentucky On The March

By Ewing Galloway

If I could get 20 to 30 letters a year like one received the other day from Jesse Stuart, the Greenup novelist and short story writer, running this column for you would be a joy forever.

"Greenup, river town of 1100 people, was without funds to fix its streets after the war. The treasury was empty, and the streets absolutely had to be fixed. Officials and civic leaders wrangled and raved about money. They didn't know where to get it.

"I don't know whether it was the mayor or a councilman that suggested that the people fix the streets themselves.

"Business men could only work Sundays. Many people were against Sunday work, but determined men had their way.

"The county loaned its trucks. The C. and O. Railway gave crushed ballast rock to patch holes in the streets. Everybody worked two Sundays and fixed the streets.

"More about civic progress in Greenup. When I was told the Lion's Club, the only service club in town, was a progressive club, I joined it. In one year's time the Lions have bought a park for Greenup town and county. Twelve acres for $5,000. Greenup is not a wealthy community, but the people made up the money in one week to pay for the park. Only a little money came from the county, but we are counting on county people to help more in raising $5,000 to improve the park.

"Greenup was incorporated in 1816. It went all these years without a park. We'll really have a nice park right on the Ohio River, with athletic field, small lake, ovens, picnic tables, and so on.

"Lions Club members each sponsored a rural school the way he saw fit to raise attendance. Attendance jumped an average of 8 per cent and a fraction.

"Still another thing the Lions Club did was to cooperate with our county agricultural agent and the College of Agriculture and put on a program to improve farming. The tobacco slogan was 'A Ton To The Acre.' Prizes were given for the best corn grown in the county.

"We will hold our first county fair this September.

"Now the Lions are working for better telephone service and for the building of a first class highway to Greenup.

"I'm not a joiner, nor a good club man. But my hat is off to any club when it helps a community.

Now let's hear from persons in other Kentucky cities and towns that are making civic progress of one kind or another. Address Ewing Galloway, R. F. D. 3, Henderson, Kentucky.

Found Guilty

IN THE NATION'S first slavery prosecution since the reconstruction era, Mrs. Alfred Ingalls, 62, former Boston socialite, was convicted by a Federal court jury in San Diego, Cal., of holding her negro maid, Dora Jones, in slavery. She is shown above in the courtroom. Her husband was similarly charged, but the jurors could not reach a verdict and were dismissed. (International)

UK Is Still Accepting Students For Fall Term

High School administrators and prospective students of Nicholas county were assured this week by Maurice F. Seay, University of Kentucky dean and registrar, that Kentucky high school graduates still have a chance to attend the University during the 1947-48 school year beginning in September.

"We are still accepting applications for admission to next fall quarter and no definite quotas have been established as yet. The University's admission policy will continue to be to take care of every qualified applicant possible," Dr. Seay declared.

In his letters to county superintendents and principals, the U. K. registrar explained that "The housing problem on the University of Kentucky campus is definitely improving. There are still rooms in U. K. dormitories and citizens of Lexington are making more rooms available for Kentucky high school graduates.

"There are now enough teachers in every department to take care of large enrollments, and the University has made arrangements for additional temporary classroom and laboratory space," he added.

Although still suffering from growing pains, the University of Kentucky next fall will be in a better position to accept new students from every part of the state and to take care of a large enrollment than it has been at any time since the post-war boom in education started swelling student totals to unprecedented heights, in the opinion of Dean Seay.

Fifty-one homemakers in Taylor county reported having improved kitchen storage space by making removable shelves.

A crop of at least 100,000 pounds of ladino clover seed is expected to be harvested in Fulton county this year.

The Simpson County Farm Bureau has raised approximately a third of a $2,000 scholarship for the education of a medical student.

Says County Agent W. B. Collins of Mason county: "Conditions are apparently right for an outbreak of cornborer—corn has reached $2.30 a bushel."
