Household Hint

If you do not want your fruit or berry pie to boil over, make the air vents in the highest part of the pastry, and wide enough so that they will not close up in the baking. If the steam can't find its way out in vents especially provided, it breaks through at the weakest point, usually around the edge where top and bottom crusts are sealed.

Tidbits of Kentucky

Dr. Gordon Wilson

Whatever else we may have learned in the 40 years, we certainly have learned to take better care of the unfortunate ones who because of birth or disease did not get an even break. I have a hard time convincing my students that there was ever a time when the mentally unfit, especially those who were born that way, remianed right in the midst of the others and were accepted as casually. I am not now referring to that old institution of the village idiot, an institution about as old as humanity, I suspect; nearly every village has somebody who seems slightly off, even though he usually can take care of himself. The ones I refer to were much more fortunate.

Before the state had adequate facilities for the care of the feeble-minded, families accepted these unfortunates as part of the suffering to which we are all heirs and did the best they could with these subnormal people. Since Father was a doctor, I saw every one that lived near Fidelity and more besides. Naturally these people were likely to be weaklings also and often sick. They came then, to be examined. I never learned to take them as casually or even so joyously as did some of my playmates. One of the best mimics I ever knew could do the part of a half-wit in our neighborhood so well that I feared sometimes, especially after I had been to Sunday-School and heard how we get punished for his faithful imitation of one. Many of my neighbors even remembered the half-witted things this feeble-minded youngster said and passed them along to other families and even to those who had left Fidelity for the Far West. I sometimes laughed, but I am afraid that I more often shivered a little when a moron stated in his moronic way what he thought about all the "weary weight of this unintelligible world."

In general the actually crazy ones were sent to Hopkinsville to the state hospital, but a few families objected so strenuously to this that they kept their unfortunates and even brought them to the village or to church or other public gathering. One remarkable case, not too far from Fidelity, was of a young woman who lost her mind long before I could remember. Her parents, and later her brothers and sisters, refused to send the girl away. She was kept in a room especially built for her, for she was dangerous. She grew into maturity and was said to be perfectly normal in appearance but always wildly shouting the names of people she had known in her early youth. For 35 or 40 years the county voted a sum for her people to take care of her. Long after I was in early middle age she was still living, though I can recall that I first heard of her when I was only six or eight years old.

Our champion crazy-man story, probably an old folk tale that has been told everywhere, concerned a bit of poetic justice that a crazy man used. The county court had decreed him insane. Two men, one of them the father of my nearest neighbors at Fidelity, were appointed by the court to take the man to Hopkinsville. The only means of transportation then was a farm wagon. The man was put into a spring seat on the wagon, with a good strong man on each side. At the end of the first day of travel the same men arrived to stop at the first house that would take them in. They explained to the landlord their condition and said that, since the man was not dangerous, they would assume responsibility for him if they could be lodged in the same room. The landlord took them in, and nothing untoward happened. The next afternoon when they decided to repeat this same ceremony of getting to stay all night, the crazy man beat them to the draw and proclaimed the other two as insane, but that he would assume all responsibility if the landlord would take them in. According to the yarn, it took some fancy explaining to establish the same as sane and the crazy as crazy.

"Fit For A Queen"

June Dairy Month gives Miss Barbara Polk, Paducha, Kentucky a special opportunity to delight in the deliciousness of dairy products. These have been most important in helping her develop her vivacious personality and animated smile to win for her the honor of Junior and Senior Prom Queen at Murray State Teachers College Murray, Kentucky.

Morgan County Develops Dairying

A route to gather Morgan county milk for the Carnation receiving plant at Mt. Sterling is one of the first steps to develop a dairy industry which Farm Agent Charlie Dixon thinks may in a few years add returns total to those of the half million-dollar tobacco crop of the county.

A survey made in 14 communities in Morgan county showed that many farmers who now own two to five cows would increase the size of their herds if a market could be found for milk.

Pasture and hay improvement programs will go along with the dairy development, Dixon said. Farm plans for this season call for 30,000 feet of drainage tile and 20,000 feet of open ditches, and application of fertilizers to hill pastures.

Exhibit Converted Lamps

Old kerosene lamps, converted for the use of electricity by members of Caldwell county homemakers clubs, were exhibited in Princeton in observance of national home demonstration week. The display consisted of lamps of Victorian style, brass lamps from which the nickel had been furnished and lamps with clear or blue glass bowls. The equipment necessary for making the changes and a poster of explanation completed the display.

Mountain Pastures Improve In Bell

A way to establish good pasture land on Bell county mountain farms has been found by William Slusher of Clear Creek. For the past five years, he has followed the practice of sowing seed each spring and keeping the land free of bushes, briars and weeds. Now he has an excellent 10-acre stand of bluegrass and white clover. Slusher told Farm Agent Hubert W. Davis that the only fertilizer the land has ever received was 200 pounds of 20 percent superphosphate, five years ago.

Household Hint

Try to rotate your sheets, putting the freshly laundered ones on the bottom of the pile and taking those off the top of the pile when you change your beds. Put a colored towel or napkin around the one that must be mended before it is used again.

Twenty thousand pounds of vetch seed were sowed last fall on tobacco and corn land in Hancock county.

More than 100 dairymen in Jefferson county seeded ladino clover with other pasture mixtures.

Summer Camps Planned For Junior Sportsmen

Between 1,200 and 1,500 Junior Conservation Club members from throughout Kentucky will participate in summer camps at Kentucky Lake and Dale Hollow between now and September 1, Earl Wallace, Director of the Division of Game and Fish announced today.

Already some of the boys are enjoying the camp life on the banks of Kentucky Lake, this having opened on June 1 and will continue there until June 22 when the camp site will be shifted to Dale Hollow where seven additional weeks of camping will be held.

The junior camping program, under the supervision of the organization superintendent, Ed Adams, is a new project with the Division of Game and Fish and is being offered club members with the hope of teaching the boys to be better conservationists. During their one to two weeks stay at the camps the boys will be taught, under expert supervision, the game and fish laws of the state, compass reading, how to handle boats, shooting and casting, bird and tree identification. Swimming sessions, with skilled swimmers in charge, will be held each day. Camp games of all types have been provided for the boys, Mr. Wallace pointed out, and the boys will be taught to play while learning more about conservation.

Boys from clubs in the First and Second Districts are attending the camp at Kentucky Lake, and those from the other seven Districts in the state will participate in the Dale Hollow excursion.

One hundred and five 4-H club girls in Henry county modeled 195 garments, including suits and coats, in the county style revue.

4-H Club Champions

EARL RHEA JEAN JESSIE MAE CHAMPION

Growing corn for his dairy herd won the state 4-H corn growing championship for Earl Rhea Jean of Jefferson county. His 11 acres of hybrid corn averaged 128 bushels to the acre, planted after alfalfa was turned under and fertilizer applied. Having won the state dairy championship, Jessie Mae Champion of Anderson county tried her hand at cooking. Last year she served 914 meals. She has won many cash prizes on foods, clothing and in dairying, and figures her six years of club work have brought her a grand total of $4,520.

H. D. Thomas of Trigg county, who has a gasoline power milking machine, is selling 40 gallons of milk per day from a herd of good quality Jerseys.

Fulton county farmers have 400 acres of Ky. 31 fescue grass and 5,000 acres of ladino clover to harvest for seed.

Over 500 pounds of Williams sides have been purchased by Elliott county farmers this season.

There is a 50 percent increase in acreage of cane planted this season in Lawrence county over last year's crop.

It is estimated that 90 percent of the corn planted in Logan county will be hybrid varieties.

The growing of strawberries is a new club project in Robertson county, the Mt. Olivet Lions Club donating 4,000 plants to 20 boys.
