Children's Book Week

Books do more to shape a child's life than any other contributing influence in the family and environment. That statement is not meant to include textbooks to which most all of us are subjected during our period of adolescence.

Just as you can judge a man by the company he keeps, also can you judge a person by the books he reads. However, until the opening of the Nicholas County Memorial Library none could be judged too harshly by the books he read.

While it is true, that there were private libraries within the town that had many good books, only within them these were not open to the entire public. Now the situation has been altered. Books may be had for the asking on the shelves of the Carlisle room.

Incidentally, this is National Book Week for Children. Many of us can become a contributing factor in shaping some child's life by donating a properly selected volume to existing this week. You may rest assured your gift will be highly appreciated and better still, widely used.

The Open Hearth

One of the most comfort-creating things about the new location is the hearth and fireplace in the reading room. The blaze from the grate offers an added touch to the comfort of the place. Just the beautiful effect one has at the hearth of a home is the desire to gather around the fire. Likewise, the hearth in the library is the object to promote warmth and cheer to all who enter the building. Let's all be neighborly and gather around the hearth.

Would Some Gift The Gittle Gir Is—

Good food and good companionship make bread and butter, are eating in the retail trade, but the two are not the only ingredients. On the other hand the two and the most indispensables for more delightful living.

Just ones this corner was honored with an invitation to partake deal of august ambrosia on the part of one of our local bakeries. Not that could have been served some instances stores have actually been picked by the hostess, but the delicious and delicious rumor strikes. The failure of the appetizer lasts with white spots well-meant but economically unsound. Even the sparkling cheese in pink glass, the scalloped oysters, dressing balls, and relish in short, gravy, garden salads, and the delicious sweet pickles, tailors have done their absolute best to hold down prices, even to the point of sacrificing the point of substantial relishing already small unit profits.

All in all, American business from the factory to the store, some out of the price inclination does. Even with rising prices, it is quite commendable over which we can complain. Not so material interest as to express honest prices consistent with the quality of workmanship, labor and material while the remainder of the guests ial ends.

CLOTHING SCHOOL HELD

An all day 4-H Club clothing leaders' training school was held Monday at the county extension office. Those in attendance were: Mrs. Girtie Brady, Headquarters 4-H Club; Mrs. John Barrett, Mrs. Kash Grimes, Parke Clark, Mrs. Naomi Cook, Nicholas County High school. The meeting was in charge of Miss Lydia Sutherland, field agent in 4-H Club work.

Millinery workshops are teaching Boone county women how to make new hats or add feathers to old ones.

History Repeats Itself

The following editorial is reprinted from the Wichita Beacon:

"Lack of understanding on the part of men who are running our government appears to be as much to blame for the chaotic condition of prices and supply as any other one factor.

"Remember back in the days of the depression when the government was recommending plowing under crops because they were in too abundant supply? Those same farmers today are trying to plow under markets because the demand is too great.

"Anyone will take a student of economics to tell our government that prices are governed almost entirely by supply and demand—regardless of the controls placed on either as an artificial stimulus for increased or decreased prices.

"The plain truth is that our supply is high, but the demand is greater because of the export policies which this country has followed and is following. Suddenly there has been a drastic cut in export allocations of grain and flour in an effort to retard the upward trend of prices.

"Looking back over the years, it isn't difficult to see that history repeats itself. Wheat after the Civil war sold for $2.85; after the Russo-Turkish war it neared to $2.45; it went to $1.85 after the Spanish-American war, and to $2.50 after the first World War—all periods of wide economic upheaval in America, the first truth which must be realized is the old fundamental economic law of supply and demand. It has never failed. It never will—regardless of subsidies, grants, doles, price-pegging or other artificial stimuli. When the supply is good, prices tend to be lower. When supply is short, prices are high provided there is no price control, in which case the short supply usually finds better, but always on the black market—at higher prices.

"We are experiencing high prices today because 40 per cent of the crop is going out of the country. We are experiencing the meat famine for the same reason. However we are witnessing the first time in history that crop this year was 800,000,000 bushels above because of weather prospects. Yet, the price of wheat is actually a little cheaper than it was at harvest time when the demand was greatest.

"These times from a little known fact, but it is coming to pass. Each age in a dream that is dying One time that is coming to birth."

Kentucky on the March

By Ewing Galloway

Though you may have read this story already, I'm going to begin this little piece with it.

A large crowd of relatives and neighbors gathered to help a centenarian celebrate his birthday.

"Uncle Henry you must have seen a great many changes in the hundred years you have lived," said one of the guests.

"Yes, I have," the old boy replied, "and I voted again every durn one of them."

I know a good many fellow Kentuckians only half as old as Uncle Henry who may have been for new things in their youth but have come just about everything modern that is proposed. Every time I hear these people condemn new proposals for local civic betterment or state-wide improvement measures I am inclined to take seriously Dr. William Oeler's ingenious allusion to the old chloroform bottle as a means of helping people over 60 get aboard Sweet Charion.

Argue with these folks? Try to convince them they are wrong? Never! There's no use. Usually I change the subject tactfully—to themselves a topic that never fails to interest them. They are on a sitdown strike in the march of progress, and, like some balky horses I have known, they won't move unless you kindle a fire under them. And then they would move backward to sit down again.

These reactionaries, along with the self-satisfied, the well-satisfied, have been a big factor in holding Kentucky back for about half a century.

But don't get me wrong about the well-satisfied Kentuckians. Most of our progressive leaders are over 45. And I'd say 25 per cent of my acquaintances over 60 are making a serious effort to keep abreast of the times—and in fact rules out Octogenarian for one three-quarter out of every four.

Every day when these elderly people with youthful minds lay themselves down to sleep there is a quiet self-congratulation in their conscious or unconscious mumbling: what next will they invent?

If Kentucky now the accent is on youth. Or maybe I should say people. Because the young people are out front. Our Common Wealth is entering upon a new era—and it's definitely the young and the mid and the fine of years before moving ahead.

Tidbits of Kentucky

Dr. Gordon Wilson

Our part in America is so close that—Would seem unnecessary to explain. Involved in mythological our people. But we know in very our bottom that we are always evening wild and fantastic in lore about our ancestors. We are fond of each American life. Only a few ever-headed people from the Atlantic to Lexington and the trail and have remained safe the subject. Some there are who have been lost in the wilderness and have never been heard from again. Every [illegible] has a [illegible] of the [illegible] of people [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
