THE GARDEN

By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics

Although white potatoes are not the first crop to be planted, their planting does entail some preliminary arranging that may well be done now.

Only certified seed should be used, to guarantee full stands of healthy, high-yielding hills, seed potato certification consisting largely of culling out diseased hills in the process of their growing. While this extra labor makes certified seed more costly than "common" or "select" seed, the extra price is always returned in the crop, sometimes many-fold.

Further to ensure the yield, all seed potatoes should be treated for scab and scurf, diseases whose germs may come in adhering soil, likely to occur in even the best-managed potato lands. Seed treatment has always given some increase in yield (by eliminating scurf), but frequently has doubled it. As tending to render the tubers scab-free, waste is saved in peeling, as well as the disposition of the peeler.

There are several ways for treating seed potatoes, but the most convenient is with Semesan Bel, a compound containing mercury, and for that reason to be handled with care. But its using is easy, following the manufacturer's direction printed on the package. It comes as a powder in 2-ounce packages, to be mixed with water, and, if care is taken not to spill any, up to 500 pounds of seed potatoes can be treated. Several neighbors might get together to treat their seed, to reduce the cost to a ridiculously low figure.

When the potatoes have dried they should be cut, in pieces weighing 1½ ounces containing at least one eye, though more or not matter, as the best-placed eye is the one to sprout. Even though more sprouts come, it does not matter, the potato's "instinct" (if one may call it that) taking care of the matter.

As the potatoes are being cut, a sprinkling of sulfur should be given, using about 10 ounces to the bushel, and the seed spread out 24 hours by which time the "false skin" will have formed and the seed may be sacked and held until planting time, even 6 weeks later.

Tidbits of Kentucky

By Gordon Wilson

For years I have intended to write an essay about the Saturday-night bath. For some reason or other I have kept putting off this pleasant job. But yesterday I read a section of the Duke of Windsor's memoirs, I decided it is to wait any longer. In spite of his being a prince and only a few years younger than I am, he too, was brought up on the good old custom of a weekly all-over bath in a portable tin bathtub at that time of the week rather far away from royalty, but the bathroom in his palace makes him almost kinfolks of mine.

Bathing or any such was not much of an ordeal at Dalziel and elsewhere in my memory as water and hard to draw from cistern or well. Of course there was hot buttered and rather sketchy added to the pleasure. Saturday was usually sketchy on cold mornings when only a sponge bath was had.

Then we come in from the fields and chores, we took a good hand-and-face-and-neck scrubbing with home-made lye soap. When

COLORED NOTES

By Aurelia Hamilton

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Clarke have moved to their home on North Broadway.

Funeral services for Harlon Derrickson were held at Paris, Wednesday. A son of the late John and Kitty Derrickson, Mr. Derrickson was widely known in Nicholas and Bourbon counties.

Mrs. Aurelia Hamilton entertained the Women's Council of the Christian church Wednesday night. Next meeting will be with Miss Charity Mark Wednesday. All ladies urged to come out, some plans ahead.

Harris' Quartette of Paris will be at this Methodist Church Sunday night.

We went barefooted, we went through the motion of washing our feet before going to bed. The handiest thing for this, as I have often said, is a tub in which salt mackerel has been shipped. My mother father liked salt mackerel as well as other strong-tasting foods; consequently, we had one about as often as Sunday mornings when we were little. Big Sister took the cuff of some long-handled underwear for a washrag and rolled the dirt off on our exposed parts. I always scoured my Big Sister of rubbing off the hide itself when she made ready for Sunday School. The worst part of this washing was the rubbing my neck the wrong way; this may have loosened some dirt but it made me cry hurt. Even the memory of this weekly agony still remains.

But there's nothing quite so pert only partial and were book. I open or neither could be at all sweet. It is true that a bath is a lot small for such a big tub and a washpan full of soapy water can accomplish wonders sometimes we got the whole of the washbowl-and-pitcher set in front room and thus had two more cupfuls of water to use. There was accumulation of dirt and dead skin. In summer, especially, we sometimes got in so much sand in the tub as poured into the washbasin. Now, this is a bath in which to wash something if you are small, you can't help but get wet all over yourself everything from a duck to a bullfrog. It probably was because of this splashing that Mother would not allow me to take such a bath out in the yard behind the house, and I could not be seen by people coming for the doctor. In winter we usually could dispense with calm our consciences merely by using a washpan.

My favorite Saturday bath was one that combined real pleasure with painful duty. We boys would go to the creek, ostensibly to take a bath but really to splash and to wrestle water animals for as long a time as we could. We took with us a big hunk of Big Deal soap, strong and ill-smelling. That was often for the benefit of the thing though, for most parents at Fidelity considered swimming for its own sake as a waste of time. I am pretty sure that we often brought back our Big Deal soap unused, but we had been in some very cold, clear water for an hour or two. Sometimes the water was so cold that we had to get out of the washing hole and run up and down the sandy shore. A favorite trick was to rub ourselves all over with sand, unconsciously rubbing all the soap off in the process. We believed that circulation enough to go to run back in the washing hole to get rid of the sand and the soap with short-cut. We have wrought some needed changes in the cleanliness of our bodies. But in the main, we have in a sense of the term were dirtier than we are today by the time we got there. Anyway, for just as much as we cried as to compel us to resort to a washpan or tub bath, a whole afternoon in the creek

Ladino Included In Pasture Improvement

Despite prices of $2.25 to $2.75 a pound, stores in Daviess county are buying tons of ladino clover seed. Many farmers are sowing ladino clover with bluegrass, redtop and timothy to improve pastures or start new ones, according to County Agent John E. Kelly. Some are sowing ladino clover and Ky. 31 fescue.

To increase livestock production, growth of dairy calves and the size to improve soils are focusing attention on more and better grass, McClure said.

Two Pullet Flocks Give Good Returns

Leander Ferguson of Lawrence county has two 200 New Hampshire pullets that had last enough eggs by Dec. 1 to pay for themselves plus $1.40 more each. Ferguson's best pullet got returns from this flock, according to County Agent J. H. Moore, were due to proper summer feeding. They were on clabber and milk the first two months when egg prices are high.

Scientists of Knox county reported gathering an average of 200 eggs per hen from 100 pullets put in a modern 20-by-24 laying house.

College Prepares Farm-Lease Form

A lease form to serve as a guide for landlords and tenants in drawing up farm-leasing arrangements has been prepared by the Farm Economics Department of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

In announcing it, the department says that "in general the lease follows local customs already well established, with emphasis on good farm practices. Of course, it is not possible to prepare a written agreement form which will fit all cases. However, this lease can be submitted to fit nearly all farm-leasing requirements in Kentucky."

Copies of "The Farm Lease" may be had at offices of county agents or by writing to the college of Lexington.

Statement on Land Values

The Farm Department issued the following statement on land values:

"If the present level of farm income in Kentucky is maintained for a few years land values will remain high or continue to increase. Many farmers who are considering the purchase of land should avoid large debts. If a farm is mortgaged for about half of its present sale price it very likely will be mortgaged for more than its sale price in 1949. Those who are considering buying a farm now should talk the matter over with a farmer who experienced a heavy debt after World War I.

"A farm should be purchased only if the income from the farm business is sufficient to pay interest and farm operating expenses, family living, taxes and insurance, and to make payments on the principal of the debt. Values will be determined by the amount of income that is left after all these items are paid. Many farmers who are considering the purchase of land should study their budgets to see if they can afford to pay for it."
