ONE OF the proud moments in a child's life comes on the day he decides he's big enough to dress himself. It's not easy. It requires intense application to get those little shoes laced, to pull a sweater over his head and make all the openings come out right. But he flatly refuses offers of assistance.

"I kin do it."

Let him try. It's worth every bit of that hard work to achieve independence and the ability to take care of himself.

Some day he's going to be faced with harder jobs and tougher decisions. He's going to have to choose between independence and some suggested "easy" ways. But if Johnny's got the stuff he had when he refused help in dressing, he'll come out on top. That's the kind of stuff that

Tidbits of Kentucky
Dr. George W. ...
In many years, among the wild things of my entire life, I have had several to-be-remembered. Within eight days we have, in what is still here, been through a great deal of trouble. I have had the greatest deal of trouble, and I have had the greatest deal of trouble, and I have had the greatest deal of trouble.
