"Understand Rivalry and you understand America"

By Ed Thorgersen

I'm sure you fans will agree that football supplies more than its share of thrills. Even before the game gets under way, you can feel a certain tenseness in the crowd. And as the teams charge onto the gridiron and the referee's whistle breaks through the sharp Autumn air, you just know you're in for thrills-a-plenty!

Yes, it's great to watch a cleverly-executed play . . . thrilling to see a fleet-footed end snare a pass in the end zone. But to me, there's nothing to compare with watching a back break into the open, side-step opposing tacklers, and race the length of the field for a touchdown. It happens every year—in many a game from Yale Bowl to the Rose Bowl—but somehow, I never tire of watching a lone figure race downfield for a score.

And speaking of races . . . another great race is going on right now—a race to supply you with more oil products. And today—October 14—is Oil Progress Day, when more than 34,000 individual oil companies in the U. S. report the results of their race to supply you with more and more oil products.

Yes, we win—because you and your neighbors are being supplied with more oil products today than ever before in history . . . more than in the peak war years! More oil for your cars and trucks . . . your oil burners and farm machinery. More oil for America's transportation . . . her diesel trains, planes and ships. More oil for her factories and military machine. Yes, more and more of the oil products that mean so much to your better living.

The need for oil in America is great. But demand has been met! Companies engaged in oil producing, refining, transportation and distribution have already shattered every record for oil supplied to you. And with every branch of the industry working constantly to further expand facilities, you can be sure of receiving even more oil products in the future.

Use them efficiently. Oil is energy for America. Oil means more comfort, better living, greater convenience for you.
