Will Labor Destroy Itself?

In an article in the Harvard Business Review, Donald R. Richberg, the well-known lawyer and authority on labor relations, who served in the government under the late President Roosevelt, considered the labor problem the nation faces today. The most serious cause for concern, he stated, is the "union bug."

"You ask me, 'Where is organized labor going?' and I say that it is going to destroy itself and the American way of life if it does not have better guidance than it is getting today from its self-appointed, short-sighted leaders and the fuzzy-minded intellectuals who call themselves 'liberals' and 'progressives'."

The nation has recently been treated to some grim examples of that. Probably the upholders in the soft labor industry are the most revealing. No one can deny that it is absolutely vital to the maintenance of the American economy, and to the national security. If production were stopped long enough, hardly a wheel would turn in this great country of more than 450,000,000 members, can say whether coal will be produced or not will be produced. He has called strike after strike, and has been a strong and persistent force in impugning our lives and standards. At the same time, there has been emphasis on better quality and better service. The fine opportunity for advancement which retailing offers has attracted a high class of personnel. And the store owners, who for years employed a clerk or an army of workers, can go as far as his ambitions and energy. There is no doubt that the retailing industry is in a position to make a great contribution to the national economy, and to the national security.

Adults And Children

By Dr. John Wilson

Right now there is growing concern) to get more and more done in a very short time. This is especially true in the case of the children. Many of the traditional things that have been done for them are being questioned. It is in good for children to be given the same kind of training, writing, and artistic, and to be given the same kind of training that adults receive. It is in good for children to be given the same kind of training that adults receive. It is in good for children to be given the same kind of training that adults receive.
