America's Show Windows

When refugees from Europe reach New York, pass through quarantine, and are finally given the freedom of this country, one of their first acts as a rule, is to walk among the streets of the metropolitan and look in its show windows. Most of them are amazed — never in their lives have they seen such abundance. It is beyond their imagination that anyone can visit a store and buy a loaf of groceries, an outfit of clothes, a refrigerator, a automobile, or anything else he wants, and in any quantity he wants.

When they move on across the continent, they find, incredible as it seems, that this abundance is everywhere. In the small towns as well as in the big cities, they find the same kind of goods, and at about the same prices. All of them are doing their best to attract the buyer and to gain his goodwill.

The retail store is the show window of America. It is in the store that the American makes his life. There, he finds the cycle goods, mass distribution of the key, advertising, bringing a flood of products to our homes. These inseparable forces are the rocks upon which our living standards are based.
