Awards had been recommended by the Clinton County Soil Conservation District, the Jessamine County Soil Conservation District and the Nicholas County Soil Conservation District for each of the persons for superior work in the conservation of the lands were:

Account Books Available
The Kentucky farm account book prepared by the University of Kentucky's College of Agriculture, is available to farmers through the county agents' office at 10 cents per book. This cost is the expense necessary in having the books printed. Twelve farmers took the book last year to keep record of the farm transactions. Such a record is very valuable for income tax purposes and it also provides a good analysis of the farming business.
