In The Year 2000

If the ingenuity of man continues as active and as successful the next hundred years as it has the past century what we of 1930 consider great will be so small in the eyes of the people of 2000, that it will hardly be worth mentioning to get along. In the two thousand years to be covered with each other from the attainment of the earth, and its extension, mankind will be unable to visit each other face to face.

The air will be navigated successfully. Steam is a motive power will be a thing of the past. Pumps and goods will be conveyed through submarine channels of the sea, and the making of an eye.

Typing will be a lost art, and man will only have to think to create a book or newspaper. This edition of the Mercury can be produced in ten minutes. The cost of such a newspaper as compared to the one of today will be as small as the cost of a postage stamp. One of them placed in a box will be sent to the homes of the people of the world. Who Is Quilty?

One upon a time there was a small town. There was nothing particular about this town to distinguish it from the thousands of other communities in the United States. The citizens of this town were typical of those in similar cities. They were looked to a certain extent from the rest of the world even though several very high wages passed through their city and railroads were on every side. Being isolated, these people created their own social structure, worked on their own civic projects and were happy wherever they were of the world from their little port.

Some of the things these people accomplished read and heard horrified them. Two youths were arrested in Ipswich for stealing a car and another youngster in a large city was caught trying to burglarize a home. The name of the home

STRICTLY FRESH

As becoming increasingly popular, especially among the young, our fresh milk is now being distributed to the homes of the city.

The fellow who says that milk is not fresh unless it comes from the U. S. is a fool. It is not the milk, it is the milkman who is the trouble. We find our milk fresh, pure and sweet.

God's Greatest

Lesson for July 13, 1930

Great men cannot always be seen at close range. The one who is seen at close range is not great. The one who is seen at a distance is great.
