Truman Requests $10 Billion To Stop Red Attack

The nation moved swiftly toward partial war mobilization following President Truman's request to Congress for a $10 billion down payment on the struggle to halt Red aggression.

The armed services announced they will begin immediately calling up limited numbers of reservists—chiefly specialists—to active duty.

Mr. Truman also authorized the calling of National Guardsmen and a free use of the draft law.

At the Pentagon, there was talk of asking Congress to raise the top draft age from 25 to 35.

The President called Congress Wednesday noon to gear the United States to a virtual war footing. He called for:

Anti-inflation controls—a swift set-up in war production—additional huge sums to arm non-Communist nations—and, later, a sharp boost in taxes.

The last Wednesday night he spoke to the nation over all major radio networks and television channels and read a dramatic last-minute report on the Korean war from Gen. Douglas MacArthur declaring:

"The issue of battle is now fully joined and will proceed along lines of action in which we will not be weakened choice.

"Our hold upon the southern part of Korea represents a secure base. Our casualties, despite overwhelming odds, have been relatively light.

"Our strength will continue to increase while that of the enemy will relatively decrease. His supply is insecure. He has had his great chance, but failed to exploit it.

That was the gist of MacArthur's dispatch—perhaps the brightest news of the war—as read by the President before a battery of radio microphones and TV cameras in the White House movie room.

But the President warned the nation that it must undergo some belt tightening to provide the sinews of war, and he condemned scare buying and hoarding as foolish and selfish.

He told Congress earlier, Mr. Truman said, "It will be necessary to make substantial increases in taxes," both to win the Korean war and to help arm America's allies against any Communist aggression elsewhere on the global front.

Late Tomato Blight Is Here, Says Straw

"Late blight of tomatoes is here, and if cool nights and wet weather continue, the disease will be very destructive," County Agent Wm. T. Straw said. Rich fertilized, vine ripened tomatoes have been the pride and joy of every home gardner of Nicholas County. Fortunately there are several excellent controls for late blight of tomatoes. It is important to begin treatment early. Sprays are more effective than ready mixed dusts and also less expensive. Two relatively new spray materials are excellent controls. These are: Copper A and Dithane. In spraying, use two level tablespoons of either material to each gallon of water. Spray both sides of leaves and cover the fruits with spray too. Spraying should be repeated once a week while weather is most favorable for the disease and repeated every ten days after the dry weather prevails.

Late blight has been identified in the following gardens: E. E. Plunkett, Ollie Hamilton, Dr. Jack Morford, and Edgar Freeland's. The disease may be recognized as a rapidly spreading foliage fungus disease. The leaves that are attacked, turn dark and curl. Tomatoes rot, with the trouble first appearing as a dark or discolored spot on the fruit. Under favorable conditions, the entire tomato plant may die in a week to ten days.

Bordeaux mixture has been recognized as a good control for the disease, but there are two objections to this material. Bordeaux may lower the productivity of the plant, and this material will cause galvanized spray tanks to rust out in one to two seasons. Use Bordeaux in a spray tank made of brass.

Copper dusts may be used, but dusts are less effective than sprays, Straw said.

Heart Disease Control Exhibit at Fleming-Mason RECC Meet August 3-4

Flemingsburg is the next stop on the schedule of the Kentucky Rural Electric Cooperative's Farm Show which is touring the state this summer. Along with the attractions offered planned by the REC A and 3-4 the Kentucky State Department of Health will have exhibits on heart disease and sanitation.

Visitors to the health exhibit will see a movie on heart disease, have their weight checked, see a blood medical exhibit of a farm home and get information literature on heart disease and sanitation.

The Fleming-Mason show opens in Flemingsburg at a site on the Fleming county fairgrounds at 7 p. m. on August 3 and runs until 10 p. m. The second day the schedule is from 9 a. m. until 4 p. m.

Feature of the heart exhibit will be the movie, 'Be Your Age,' which will start promptly at 7:30. The 11-minute short tells the story of how one man recovers from a heart attack and learns how to adjust himself to living with a handicapped heart. This exhibit is sponsored by the Division of Heart Disease Control and the Kentucky Heart Association.
