Here Abouts . . .

tom and take a "shower" occasionally. A shower is not too bad. Instead of sitting in your overall work attire, you simply stand there and rinse yourself off.

Consequently, five weeks ago I took out our bath tub and arranged for a tile shower part so I wouldn't be too obnoxious in more-or-less antiseptic society. On the same date our furnace washer broke down and the hot water turned off, in anticipation of summer. But us luck would have it, Black-berry winter set in. Then, sure enough, you couldn't wash. No heat; no hot water, and definitely no shower, because the man couldn't get any tile, and wouldn't for another eight or ten weeks.

But I settled. So, we went to California.

Out there we visited former Maysfieldians, who live in one-room bungalows with water, gas, bath, heat control, television phones, and practically everything except room. There, it seemed, would be the ideal place to wash! But I'm flat flannels. So I bought some sheets and a bottle of detergent and (for blood-thinning purposes) and started back home. Now I have a bit of confusion in our hostess' home. I checked out the wrong car.
