MAYOR McGUP By John Jarvis

THE STORY OF BING

By Maude McCurdy Welch

MY FIRST ACQUAINTANCE with Bing began one late afternoon when I was coming home from the grocery store with a package of ground meat for supper.

Just as I started into my house, I heard a very queer noise coming from the front yard of my neighbor's house. It was such a queer noise, like a hoarse pitiful cry, that I turned and saw several people gathered on my neighbor's lawn, so I went over to see what was happening.

A baby crow was sitting on the grass and the neighbors were gathered around him. His mouth would give wide open and now and then he'd give those shrill cries of distress. I said, "Why, he's hungry."

Johnny, the little crippled boy who lived over here with his mother, shook his head. "We've given him bread crumbs and water, everything we can think of, but he won't eat. He just sits there and hollers. We don't know what to do."

I didn't know much about birds and had never seen a baby crow before, but I knew this little fellow was hungry. He wanted his mother so she could feed him. When I thought about this, I thought I knew what to do. Someone had brought the nestling to Johnny, saying it had been found in the woods, all alone and had probably fallen out of the nest. He hadn't had time to learn to eat.

I opened my package of ground meat and made a very tiny roll of meat between my fingers. The next time the bird opened his mouth to cry, I dropped it in. Now if a crow could smile, I'd say right here that this little fellow just simply smiled all over himself. So now we'd learned how to feed him, everything was right with Bing's world.

That's what Johnny had named him. He and Bing were soon good friends. Every morning when it was warm Johnny's mother would wheel him out on the lawn in his chair and Bing would perch on the arm of the chair or on Johnny's shoulder. Sometimes he'd decide to sit right on top of his head, and we'd all get a laugh at that.

Bing grew up awfully fast. It wasn't anytime at all before he could eat his food without any help and fly all over the neighborhood. But he'd never stay away from Johnny very long. During the summer afternoon I'd go over and sit on the lawn with Johnny and Bing, and we'd work hard trying to teach Bing to talk.

Johnny firmly believed Bing could learn to talk. We'd say simple words to Bing, words like sun, or Johnny or meat, looking straight at the crow and being careful to form the word distinctly.

Bing would just sit there on Johnny's chair, and looked right straight at us, his eyes very bright and intelligent, but all he'd ever say was "Caw! Caw!" In the late afternoon when Johnny would want to go in the house, he'd call out "Mama! Mama!" and his mother would come out and wheel both Johnny and Bing inside.

Bing was a great favorite all over the neighborhood. He was such a friendly bird, he'd swoop down when he'd see some of the neighbors on their lawns and walk around among them, cawing and strutting.

But one day he flew two or three blocks away and got mixed up with a big crowd of jay-birds. They took out after him (there must have been about twenty of them), and Bing came home ninety miles be nothing, screaming wildly all the way, "MaMa! Ma-Ma!"

And this was how he learned to say his first word.

Homemakers' Happenings

Parks Homemakers

By Mrs. Mason Bryant

The last lesson on "meat and vegetable cookery," was given at the April 5 meeting of the Parks Homemakers, at the home of the club president Mrs. Warner Lowe.

Fourteen members were present. Projects for next year were voted on, and plans were made for making lamp shades next month.

Mrs. Warner Lowe and Mrs. Marion George were the project leaders.

The lessons on cooking have been very interesting, and we have learned the healthful benefits as well as the deliciousness.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Horace Bell, Thursday, May 3.

Sunnyside Homemakers

By Mrs. Elbridge Miller

Seventeen members were present at the last meeting of the Sunnyside Homemakers at the home of Mrs. George Davis.

Three visitors blessed the assembly, Mrs. Charles Ishmael from Ellisville club, Mrs. Jack Alexander and Mrs. Erwin Brunker from Cynthiana. Little Coleman Gillespie and Rose Ann Simons were the children to rifle day. Later in the afternoon, D. W. Booth, Becky Barlow Carlisle, and Diane Davidson, Lexington, joined them.

"Vegetable Cookery" bussied the women and children round, when the president called all together for the devotional given by Mrs. George

Reading the account of the creation is in Gen. 1. The thought she gave for the month was "Learn to Laugh." Some author said, for "Laugh and the world laughs with you, weep and you weep alone," which is very true.

She also gave a poem, 'Uncle Moses' with the Green Thumb,' which took us back to those we love who have gone on before, and that things we accomplished together in love, last for ever.

Mrs. Dorothy Neal led our grace in song and then we went to the dinning room for our basic meal. Our lesson was given after lunch by our project leaders, Mrs. George and Mrs. Hollar, telling us to serve three vegetables each day, one leafy, one green and one yellow vegetable; a meat, a salad, and dessert. Our dessert for the lesson was gingerbread upside down cake.

Vitamin A helps build resistance against infections of the throat, from force of habit. Henry shuddered to see that he should right now be in the parish hall at a concert dish dinner. The women of the Guild would be wondering what had happened to him. He just couldn't meet them tonight. It would be bad enough when the sickening affair was public. Tonight, at least he would not make excuses for Anne's absence.

He reached over and extinguished the study lights. "Let them think what they will. I cannot face them now." With shaking hands he lit his pipe and tried to think of the same way to handle this business so that it would inflict the least damage on the church. Anne, too, must be protected against her own rash action.

"So far as that goes, I must be to blame," he thought in surprise. "I'll see how I loved her and I thought she loved me. How did I fail her? Who is this Donald?"

Quick, familiar footsteps on the walk and Anne's lilting voice calling, "Henry, Dear, what is keeping you? Where are you?" seemed to come in a dream. "Why, Henry, what is wrong? The women are waiting dinner for you at the parish hall." Anne stood in the doorway, her piquant face showing more carefully.

He removed and polished his glasses pensively. His thin fingers rumpled his sandy hair as he studied the stark black and white note.

"I cannot stand the humdrum life I am leading here. I must have excitement, gaiety, life! I cannot go on like this any longer. I love Donald and I am going to him. He means life itself to me. This life with you is only tedium and mockery and it cannot go on. This is the end."

Sometime later, he roused himself and glanced at his desk memo

A SHORT STORY BY ISABELLE SNYDER

THE NOTE

THE REVEREND HENRY MARTIN tipped his hat with a pleasant greeting to a passing parishioner as he turned into his walk. Since his marriage to Anne, coming home to the rectory was the best time of the day. She was such a happy, cheerful person—almost too cheerful and full of fun for a parson's wife, she admitted ruefully at times.

Henry had worried at first that Anne might find life as a minister's wife in a small community too dull and that she might miss the excitement of her work in the big advertising agency. But Anne had seemed to fit into the new life as easily as if she had been born to it.

As he opened the front door and entered the hall, Henry was aware of an unusual quiet. The radio was still; there was no welcoming call from kitchen or study.

"Anne, Honey, where are you?" His voice echoed back forlornly. He listened a moment and became increasingly sure that not only was the house empty, but that there was no smell of dinner in it.

Returning finally to the study, Henry dropped into his desk chair. He pushed the electric typewriter out of his way. A sheet of paper in the machine caught his eye and he glanced at it carelessly. As he grasped the startling words, he straightened and read the message more carefully.

"I cannot stand the humdrum life I am leading here. I must have excitement, gaiety, life! I cannot go on like this any longer. I love Donald and I am going to him. He means life itself to me. This life with you is only tedium and mockery and it cannot go on. This is the end."

Sometime later, he roused himself and glanced at his desk memo

Miranda Homemakers

An all day meeting was enjoyed April 12 at the home of Mrs. James Lowe. The lesson "vegetable cookery" was given by Mrs. Lowe and Mrs. Cecil Smart. The leaders stressed the importance of having vegetables regularly in our daily diet.

Mrs. Llovell Shaw president, presided over the business. Miss Roberta Templeman gave the lesson on landscaping.

The club voted to give $2 to the cancer fund and $1 to library. Mrs. Shaw donated a baby bed to the rest room, Mrs. William Stacy donated the mattress and Mrs. Cecil Smart a pillow and sheet.

Mrs. Neal asked that the club try to improve the rest room and paint house lawn.

Fourteen members and two visitors answered the roll call with their favorite hymn.

The May meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Ollie Ray Cannon with Mrs. Willie Stone as hostess. The lesson will be "Parchment Lamp Shades."
