Recipe Of The Week

Hard cooked eggs combine well with canned or cooked fish to take the place of more expensive meat. Tuna fish or salmon are especially good in this recipe, according to food specialists at the College of Agriculture and Home Economics, University of Kentucky.

Egg and Tuna Scallop
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon onion salt
1 teaspoon Worcester sauce if desired
½ cup dry bread crumbs
4 hard cooked eggs
1 can tuna

Melt butter, add flour and cook over low heat until bubbly. Add milk all at once and cook, stirring constantly, until thickened. Add seasonings. In a greased casserole, arrange a layer of crumbs, sliced eggs, tuna and white sauce. Repeat with the remaining ingredients, retaining enough crumbs to butter for use as a topping. Bake in a moderate oven, 375 degrees, for about 30 minutes, or until top is bubbly and nicely browned.

Menu: Egg and tuna scallop, buttered peas, steamed carrots, lettuce salad, biscuits, butter and rhubarb upside-down cake.

THE GARDEN

The Striped Cucumber Beetle
By Jesse S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture

The cause of "cucumbers dying over night" as they saying is, is the striped cucumber beetle, the black-and-white-yellow beetle that flies about cucumbers, squash, cantaloupes, cushaws and watermelons.

Although the adults do some damage gnawing small holes in the leaves, it is the plants, the far more serious damage is that done while the insect is in the larval or "worm" stage. In fact, if dead or dying plants are pulled up, it will be observed that all side roots are gone, only the inadequate tap-root remains. The "dying" starts as much as six weeks before it appears and this is how.

The adults of last year find winter shelter where they may, emerge in spring and as the seedlings of the crops named above emerge, the beetles dive down the soil cracks which the seedlings make, and there lay eggs. In from three to a few days hatch cream-colored, black-headed larvae that immediately start consuming the seedlings. Some seedlings never reach light, some may make a leaf or two and then die, but some are only slightly injured, to die when blossoms appear or fruits start, or even after they have produced seed.

Knowing when the insect starts and how it starts, is the key to the plan for its control, the object being to stop the worms, but also because the number of adults that cause the later damage to plants.

As soon as the first seedlings break through, a poison dust is so applied that it enters the soil cracks. A poppin duster may be used, or even a pepper box will do, material, always at the center of the hills. The dust may be 5 per cent Rotenone mixed with bentle dust or 3 per cent DDT, for larger acreages. Even the last year are just "humping" should be dusted. Then, in three days a second such dusting is given, by which time all soil cracks are open. Five days later, the third dusting is made, followed by two more, five days apart, the later dusters serve to dust the surface of the soil about the hills, to keep off flies the insects that in the meantime have grown up and might start gnawing about the plants' bases.

DOWN ON THE FARM
By Wm. T. Straw, County Agent

Liza Beetles Are Destroying Potatoes

The lowly liza beetle, the small black bug, is now getting down to serious business in eating dainty pont holes in potato, tomato, and other plant leaves. Left unguarded, this insect may completely destroy the crop. The remedy is simple to apply. Use two tablespoons of 50% wettable DDT per gallon of water. Nearly 100% control can be obtained by using this treatment about ten days after the first treatment is an additional ten days. The poison will also kill the regular potato beetle and the leaf hopper which are both very destructive.

Peach Leaf Curl

Owen Proctor of the Crooks area asked yesterday how late a curl of the peach tree can be controlled. There is no control at this season of the year, however, a dormant spray applied before foliage appears will give excellent control. The material to use is dry lime sulphur, twenty tablespoons per gallon. Do not use this treatment now, because it would burn the entire foliage from the tree.

To Spray Grapes

Black rot of grapes, the disease that gradually destroys the fruit, can be controlled by spraying. Two applications should be made during the growing season. Most grapes will be in blossom next week. The material to use is the same as for tomato blight, basic copper sulphate, copper, lime, or fermate will do. Use two tablespoons per gallon. Use only material for spraying that is of high strength and not materials that have been prepared for dusting. Treat first when grape blooms are about ¼ out, and the second when the bloom clusters are fully out. The two treatments are spaced about three or four days apart.

Ammonium nitrate applied when corn is about knee high will definitely increase corn yield. Two hundred pounds per acre is the rate. The fertilizer should be applied in a way to get contact with the plant to prevent burning. The following item appeared in the Mt. Sterling Advocate and might be of interest to farmers who have their tenants spread manure. Many farmers do not use manure. A good substitute method is to broadcast 100 pounds of complete fertilizer. In addition apply complete fertilizer at the time. One of the best ways to do this is use the plow attachment on a wheel hoe. Set furrow about two inches deep on each side of row, while the plants are still small. Apply the fertilizer in the small furrows and cover the furrows with the wheel hoe plow.

This method of row application has been successful with potatoes many times beans, tomatoes, and in fact it will help all vegetables. If the garden has been manured heavily, phosphate should be used instead of complete fertilizer. A good garden fertilizer is one that contains relatively high amount of phosphate such as 5-10-5. 4-12-8, or 4-16-8.

Alfalfa stands will last longer, produce more hay, better hay, and be cheaper by the ton if they are filled. An application each year just after the first cutting will go a long was toward improving the succeeding cuttings and maintain the fertility of the soil. Five hundred to 1,000 pounds per acre of 0-12-12, 0-14-14, 0-19-19 or 0-20-20 are recommended for established fields. There might be some danger of burning if application is made during a dry time. It would be ideal if application could be made just ahead of a rain. A fact that will show the need of fertilizing alfalfa is that it will require about 1200 pounds per acre of 0-12-12 to replace the amount of potash removed from the soil in harvesting three tons of alfalfa hay.

Spring plants maybe made earlier with the use of mittates. These materials should not be used until the ground is warm and has had fast tender growth of the top with a well developed system of the roots. However, the treatment is sometimes desirable to make plants from wildlife or other disease in the beds.

Either nitrate of soda or ammonium nitrate may be used. Nitrate of soda contains 16% nitrogen and a treatment will normally be efficient in about ten days. Ammonium nitrate contains about 33% nitrogen and will require about a longer period than ten days. Plants may be seriously burned in using the latter material. These materials are best applied by dissolving in a barrel of water. Five pounds of nitrate of soda, or two and a half to three pounds of ammonium nitrate to each twelve foot bed is a generous treatment. After applying nitrate, the bed should be washed with at least a barrel of water. These materials should never be applied dry. Burning of plants will almost always result from dry treatment, even just ahead of a rain.

All farmers signed up in the ACP are entitled to share in 1951 program funds allocated to the state provided they adopt approved soil and water conservation practices. Sometimes this assistance—covering a part of the cost of practices—is advanced to the farmer in the form of a "purchase order" to help him buy materials.
