A Good Sanitation Program

A good basic sanitation program should be the goal of any progressive and forward moving community.

Four main points in a good sanitation program for Carlisle or any community near its size would be; 1) adequate sewage system, 2) adequate garbage collection and disposal, 3) the control of flies, mosquitos and other disease carrying insects and, 4) control of rats.

Unfortunately, a look about our alleys, our vacant lots and other logical spots, will find that the community is woefully lacking in the majority of these basic points.

The residents of any town are largely responsible for any condition, good or bad, that prevails in their community. Several civic organizations here in the past have recognized the need for an improvement in the sanitation problems but as yet no concerted movement has gotten underway to really go out and tackle the job and lick it.

Since this is the time of the year when flies, mosquitoes and other insects are beginning to multiply rapidly, steps should be taken now to control them.

If the responsibility for this cleaning-up falls on the shoulders of the city officials, we think that any added financial burden would be well below the cost of the results.

The health of your children depend upon a good sanitation program. Why not see to it that they get the best.

Protection For The Millions

"The greatest bulwark which the medical profession can have against socialization is the more extensive development and improvement of voluntary health insurance."

That statement was made the other day by the president of he American Medical Association.

The history of voluntary health insurance has been dramatic. The movement is comparatively new, and it has had the usual growing pains in its early days. Yet recent surveys show that almost 77,000,000 people have some type of coverage against the cost of illness. And the number is still increasing at a very rapid rate.

Moreover, health insurance isn't static. The coverage offered has been steadily broadened. The benefits paid have been increased. And the rates charged have remained low—a few dollars a month for the average worker and family.

In February, 1949, a state-wide Minnesota poll showed a 2-to-1 vote in favor of socialized medicine. A similar poll taken last year showed the situation exactly reversed—the result of fear against. Other polls are in agreement. The splendid progress made by voluntary health insurance has undoubtly been an important factor in bringing about such changes in public sentiment and thinking.—(INS).

KPA Loses Round One

The Advocate, like other Kentucky newspapers, as well as radio and television stations, is disappointed that the Kentucky Press Association-sponsored libel bill was defeated during the closing hours of the General Assembly.

Although the measure was ably handled by Union County's Representative Will Tom Wathen, and there seemed to be little doubt that it would pass without any opposition, the Senate turned thumbs down on the bill, we believe, because of undue influence of the small minority opposing it. It had been passed unanimously in the House.

As The Courier-Journal points out editorially: "Kentucky does not have an adequate libel law. A small-town editor can be put out of business by a suit resulting from an erroneous statement published without malice or knowledge or error, even though the statement originated with a press service over which the editor had neither control or supervision. Present libel law does not deal with libel, slander or retractions by radio and television stations. . .

"A more thorough law is needed to define the responsibility of radio and television stations.

The Kentucky Press Association therefore, has lost round one of its honest effort to get a new bill thru the legislature, but we feel sure the battle isn't lost completely.—Union County Advocate.

Dear Mr. Flury:

Thanks for the Mercury. A durned fine weekly newspaper. Your front page make-up is excellent, with headlines big enough but not too big for the items.

Sending you a new mat. The old heading seems to be overworked.

To date having around eighty papers in Kentucky using my stuff is one of the most flattering things in my none too useful life. A good many put me at the top of their editorial page when they have nothing of their own to fill it.

Coming to Carlisle to see you one of these fine days.

Thanks,

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

The unreality of evil by proving the all-power of God will be explained at Christian Science services next Sunday. Subject of the Lesson-Sermon is "Unreality."

Selections from the Bible include the following verse from II Corinthians (10:4): "(For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds)."

Correlative passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, include the following: "Life, Truth, and Love are the realities of divine Science. . . As a cloud hides the sun it cannot extinguish, so false belief silences for a while the voice of immutable harmony, but false belief cannot destroy Science armed with faith, hope, and fruition." (P. 298).

The Golden Text is from Ecclesiastes (5:7): "In the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but fear thou God."

From a local restaurant—A grandfather was having trouble controlling his two young grandchildren and after some time remarked to them: "Now if you don't be good you won't go to Heaven." To which one replied, that doesn't make any difference, we never get to go anyplace, anyhow."

"The beautiful blonde behind the counter was idly polishing her nails, when a drab, distraught man rushed up to her and said, "I have lost my wife in this shop. Do you mind if I converse with you a little while?"

"For goodness sake!" the girl replied. "What good will that do?"

"Just wait and see," the man replied. "She'd sure fix me fine if she finds me talking to a pretty girl."

His wife appeared in three minutes.

The new Kentucky narcotics law is a praiseworthy piece of legislation, but if I had authored it 20 years in the pen for selling drugs to teachers to minors would have been the minimum, not the maximum penalty. I never did like penal laws with "up to" in them. But the new statute authorizes the courts to inflict a 20-year penalty if they want it. It puts the responsibility on juries and judges. If the courts are lenient it is their fault.

The creature who sells drugs or recipes to children is one notch below a murderer. One takes a human life, the other ruins it. And 20 years in prison for persons selling dope to children is not too severe a penalty.

Now that we have a reasonably good narcotics law it is up to the police authorities of Kentucky to catch the peddlers. In the smaller towns marijuana cigarettes are peddled to teen-aged school boys and girls. To the youngsters a reefer party is a lark. Then, before they realize it, they are addicts. Reefers lead to drugs and ruined lives. And this sort of thing can happen in your family or your neighbors' families.

Federal enforcement has greatly reduced the narcotics traffic in recent years, but the Narcotics Bureau, always short-handed in enforcement job, now has a staff of only 270. State and county authorities can learn about enforcement from the federal bureau and cooperate with it.

I don't know whether there is a printed manual on narcotics law enforcement. There ought to be. If there isn't Kentucky ought to persuade the Federal bureau to write one, then have it put in the hands of all Kentucky sheriffs and municipal police chiefs.

Maybe by 1954 the legislature will see the advisability of mandatory long-term penalties for dope sellers. "Must" and "shall" should be better than "up to."

Parent Problems

The Youngster Who Tries To Keep Up With An Older Child

By GABBY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

LET US consider the child who strives desperately to keep up with an older brother or sister. Usually the case is most serious when the age difference is only one or two years. The struggle may begin before the younger or both are in school, though it is more frequent between the ages of six and twelve, it seems.

It may relate to making things with the hands, to physical play contests or to books. The younger one, while normally a grade or two below the older one, may strive to make as good school grades as the older, or even to surpass him.

Tries to Keep Up

Whether about the home on the farm, in the village or city, the younger may try to keep up with his older brother or sister or the gang as they walk or run about, stroll through the woods or fields or engage in competitive games. Normally, the younger, with shorter legs, may find it hard just to walk or run as fast as the older. In play or handcraft skills if the older excels for his age, the ambitious younger one may try hard to keep up. It can be a terrific physical and nervous strain on the younger child. Great as this harm may be, let us not overlook the possible gains from the activities entered in the younger and the spur to his effort.

Often the older child, while flattered by the youngster's attempt of his own excellence, may be annoyed that his younger brother or sister does so strictly keep up. Then, too, the older, wishing to have his own friends, may be vexed that the younger so often tags in and tears along. Helping the younger cultivate more playmates of his own age might help some.

If at school the older has impressed his teachers as a good student and school citizen, they incline to be always reminding the younger of what the older one achieved "when he was in this grade." And if the younger does not measure up to the reputation of the older, he may suffer intermittently. This even carries on to college. Some younger brothers and sisters studiously avoid the college where a brother or sister was "famous."

It's truly tragic when a younger child reaches the same grade at school as an older brother or sister. The older feels overshadowed by the obvious comparison, not to mention the verbal comparisons, by the parents, relatives, teachers and classmates. It's hardly probable, too, that the younger will grow concerted and lord it over the older.

When possible, these children should not be in the same classroom. The elder's inward pain could be lessened if he could achieve excellence in other ways than at books. (My bulletin "Parenting" may be had in a stamped envelope sent me in care of this paper.)

ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Scripture—John 15:1-9; Romans 16:1-22; Philippians 2:12-17; Colossians 4:7-18.

By Alfred J. Buescher

Talking to His disciples shortly before the crucifixion, Jesus likened Himself to a vine and His apostles to its branches: "He that abideth in Me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without Me ye can do nothing."

Writing to the Romans, Paul sent warm salutations to the men and women who had worked for Christ, even risking their lives to preach the gospel. He warned them to beware of those who would cause divisions among them.

To the Philippians Paul wrote that they should "do all things without murmurings and disputings, . . holding forth the word of life, that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain."

In a letter to the Colossians Paul wrote that "all my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother and fellow servant in the Lord . . . that he might comfort your hearts."

Kentucky Senator Blasts Commies In Capitol Hill Speech Monday

There isn't anything the United States can do that will suit Russia, U. S. Senator Tom R. Underwood declared in a radio broadcast on the Capitol Hill program Monday night from Louisville.

Referring to Communist objections to the European Defense Community, the Kentucky Senator said, "We might as well go ahead with our own plans and not let the Communists tie us up in protracted peace conferences. This might be a very good time to tell them off."

Senator Underwood said that the proposal for six European nations to form a defense community without the United States or Great Britain as parties "is exactly the thing for which many Americans have been asking." This is an effort on the part of these nations to help themselves, Senator Underwood said.

Referring to the recent visit of General Alfred M. Gruenther, chief of staff for General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower, to Washington to urge support of the mutual security program, Senator Underwood said:

"That was all right. General Gruenther is an authorized spokesman. The trouble is that there are too many unofficial and unauthorized spokesman who are trying to speak for General Eisenhower politically who are just guessing what to say and were not delegated any rights by the General of the Army.

"The United States Senate ratified the Japanese peace treaty on March 20. At the same time treaties for mutual security with Japan, Australia and the Philippines were ratified. There were ten votes against the Japanese treaty and 22 for the Jenner Reservation.

"If General Eisenhower were nominated and elected President he might put into control of Congress those who are such isolationists they wouldn't even vote for the Japanese peace treaty.

"However the treaties were ratified in the U. S. Senate and the European Defense Community is progressing through General Eisenhower's help in Europe so that the structure of freedom and civilization in accordance with the principles, provisions and processes of the United Nations charter is being built, stone by stone and wall by wall."
