Green Pastures

For the third consecutive year August has been proclaimed "Green Pastures Month" throughout the Commonwealth by the Governor of the state.

Usually August is the time of lush, green pastures when the country is beautiful and green. August is the month in which to plant new pastures, the best month to get green pastures, and therefore a good month to read the Green Pastures month program.

Important strides have been made in the last few years in Kentucky in the field of agriculture and promoting better pasture lands. Many farmers in this area have turned to more and better pastures to increase their income. And better pasture farming does pay.

It is possible to provide plans for making the most of the best of the New York Stock Exchange and high-producing pastures. Land which probably would be considered for cultivation of row crops. It also provides for the growing of grasses and legumes. They furnish cheap feed in the form of hay, silage and pasture, which is the best and most profitable way of utilizing the soil that has been developed in this area.

A good Green Pastures program in Kentucky is a good farm plan. It is a plan for the farmer through better farm production.

Polio Precautions

From several counties in Kentucky have come alarming reports that polio, the fearful disease which strikes without warning and leaves its victims in a state of helplessness, is now in this county. The polio problem has not been serious this year. But since this is the worst time for the disease to appear, it is well to take precautions to keep our children safe from the disease.

A few preventive measures have been issued by the National Foundation of Infantile Paralysis. They believe that by observing these safety rules the danger of contracting the disease is reduced.
