Place Plant Bed To Avoid Disease

Care in selecting sites for plant beds may help to avoid the black shank disease in tobacco, according to Circular 691 of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics.

"The new bed should be placed where it will receive no drainage from a tobacco shank field and where dirt from the barnyard and tobacco lots is not likely to be carried to it on the feet of animals or men," it is suggested.

"The bed should be located where it can be reached without walking across a black shank field. It should be prepared with clean tools, and if watering is necessary the water should be from a cistern, well, spring or pond that does not receive drainage from a black shank field, or a city water supply, and not from a stream or river.

"Make your plant bed large enough and care for it well, so that you will not need to get plants from another farm. In case of a plant bed failure in a black shank area in Kentucky, a grower would be much safer to go to a blackshank-free area for plants, but should take every precaution not to carry black shank to the farm from which he gets the plants."

Tobacco Demand To Continue Strong

Demand for the 1952 crop of tobacco is likely to be strong, with prices about the same as received for the 1951 crop, according to the annual outlook report of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics. Costs of production, however, may be higher this year.

Cigarette output this year probably will be larger than the past year, which was 4 to 5 percent above 1950. The manufacture of smoking and chewing tobacco and snuff is expected to be about the same as in 1951. Exports are not likely to increase in 1952.

Burley production the past year was 17 percent above the 1950 production. Stocks are down, however, the total supply on Oct. 1 being only 4 percent larger than a year earlier.

Production of fire-cured and dark air-cured tobaccos was up some the past year, but consumption, including exports, also was larger.

Marketing quotas provide for individual farm acreage allotments this year about the same as the past season.

Since tobacco growers can't have more acres, they can boost incomes only by stepping up acre yields or by reducing the cost of production.

The report notes that the price of burley is about as much above the 1935-39 level as corn, eggs, milk and hogs. Prices of dark tobacco are relatively higher but are not as high as beef cattle, veal calves and lambs.
