Welcome Enthusiasm

If enthusiasm among the members of the American Legion can be used as any measuring stick for the success of the coming Blackberry Festival, then we predict that this year's celebration will be one of the biggest yet on record.

At Friday night's meeting of the post, 80 members were in attendance, the largest number that has attended a meeting here in recent years. The reports of the various committees for the Festival were heard and all were favorable. The committees evidently tackled their assignments almost as soon as they were given and many of them have completed their initial arrangements.

Three days and nights of celebration are planned for the third, fourth and fifth of July and even at this early stage, things seem to be snowballing into a gala celebration, consisting of all the color, music, dancing and fireworks that it takes to really stage a festival of this type.

The Legion must be congratulated on its efforts to bring Carlisle an enjoyable and entertaining Blackberry Festival and we're sure that in those weeks from now local residents and others will be having all the fun in the world right here in Carlisle, thanks to this civic-minded post.

The Summing Up

(J. Dan Baldwin, manager, Kentucky State Fair)

A State Fair is a report on the progress of the state it represents. The Kentucky State Fair will attempt to stand unto nine short days, September 5-13, the "summing up" of the greatest year our state has ever had in industrial expansion, agricultural growth, livestock breeding, 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America work, farm machinery development, needcraft, horticulture, culinary art and the hundreds of other diversified interests that go into the making of a State Fair.

The Kentucky State Fair is the biggest show of the year. We are proud of the fact, and proud of the progress your fair has made in recent years.

Again this year the accent will be on Youth and Education. There will be a brand new Farm Equipment Department, a new "Made in Kentucky" section in the Merchants and Manufacturers Building and for the first time, a Free grandstand, to mention just a few of this year's attractions.

The Kentucky State Fair has improved Kentucky farms, built better livestock herds, and encouraged the efforts of all of its' citizens for all of the 44 years of State Fair history. Every Kentuckian should take an active part in the State Fair, either as an exhibitor or visitor.

A "Bad Loser"

Under study by the Kentucky Court of Appeals this week is a case dealing with whether or not Louisville, as a city, can adopt Daylight Saving Time, when the 1952 Kentucky Legislature passed a law requiring all of Kentucky to maintain Standard Time after June 19.

Whether you're "for or against" Daylight Saving Time shouldn't enter into a decision as to whether or not Louisville can do this. In a democratic form of government the basic concept is that the majority should rule. Evidently the majority of representatives of the people wanted the adoption of Standard Time at this past legislature or the measure would not have been passed.

We are aware of the fact that Louisville, with its numerous offices and factors, workers, certainly would like to have the Daylight Time. However, it should not act the role of the "bad loser" and under the guise of a "popular poll" attempt to disregard the laws of Kentucky and overrule the action of the legislature, and therefore the people of Kentucky, by continuing on Daylight Time.

We hope that the Court of Appeals when it hands down its decision on the case will back up the majority and compel Louisville to return to Standard Time, which at the same time will give her a little more respect for the laws of Kentucky.

INSTRUCTORS NAMED FOR ATOMIC SERIES

Instructors were announced last week at the University of Kentucky for a series of courses entitled "Atomic Science in Our Daily Lives," to be offered during the summer session at the school. The series, the first college attempt in the nation to reduce the concepts of atomic science to the layman's level, will include six courses. Teachers in the program are Dr. James W. Andrew deacon, associate professor of anatomy and physiology; Dr. Alfred Brauer, professor of zoology; Lewis W. Cochran, instructor in physics; Dr. Lyle R. Dawson, professor of physical chemistry, and Dr. Herbert P. Riley, head of the Department of Botany.

When a person accused of murder is released on bail it is two strikes on the prosecuting lawyers and the people of Kentucky.

The Kentucky constitution provides that persons indicted as willful killers are entitled to release on bond if there is doubt as to their guilt. The defense may move to have the accused released, and it is up to the county attorney or commonwealth's attorney to make himself heard. My understanding is that in most cases the prosecuting lawyer gives his consent, though there's no way of getting complete statistics on the subject.

When a prosecuting attorney consents to the granting of bail to a person indicted for murder and then tries to convict the defendant of a capital offense, he is dramatizing his own defeat and perhaps a miscarriage of justice.

I asked an able Kentucky prosecutor the other day why a prosecuting attorney would agree to bail on his case and then try to obtain a murder conviction — why he would admit weakness in the indictment instead of reducing the charge to manslaughter. The judge said that the prosecution asked for the capital charge when consenting to bail he would be in a position to use newly discovered evidence to get a murder conviction. Well, that was legal sophistry, such as a smart lawyer might give us for bokus.

Gentle treatment of killers is one of the reasons why life is so cheap in Kentucky. If any killer released on bail has been convicted of cold-blooded murder and executed in a Kentucky court in the last 20 years I would appreciate hearing about it. If I were being paid for writing this article I'd probably offer a ten-buck reward for such information.

My point is that when a person accused of willful murder is released on bail in the next he's responsible to convict him for her of that crime—that the prosecution admits defeat when he consents to bail.

Picture a good-looking woman accused of murder and immediately released on bond. Even if she went home and kept herself out of sight until trial day, the most fact that she had been free would help her tremendously. If she came to court attractively dressed and glamorized by the art of a beautician—well, would you like the job of trying to send her to the electric chair? I wouldn't. I'd probably be obliged to obtain a competent verdict of manslaughter and there, by save my official face.

The Mercury's picture gallery has finally found its way back into the newsroom, thanks to Bill Power. We now have some 100 pictures on the wall of the office, which people who come in never fail to scan with interest, and maybe pick out a picture that they're in, or that someone that they know real well is in. Some of the pictures date back several years. While most of them have been run in "The Mercury," many of them never found their way into print, for one reason or another, but are quite interesting just the same.

* * *

The use of mats in small pictures as our limited budget will permit is one mast factor, we believe that The Mercury combines to enjoy increasing popularity, especially among the "camera fans." Along with our complete news coverage, we believe that the use of these pictures is one of the prime reasons that The Mercury has been able to keep the circulation of any newspaper right here in Nicholas county. It used to be a town and have a few minutes to spare drop in and look them over. We're sure you'll find them as interesting as many of your neighbors have.

Beginners Luck — Mrs. Billy Parker was initiated into the realms of trout water fishermen Monday night when she caught her first bass, justly artificial bait. About 12 inches long. She pulled it out of the lower lake at the reservoir. Those fishing in the boat said they could hear husband Billy shouting directions to her, probably much to the annoyance of the fish.

Enough Said — A small retailer in a Chicago suburb had been trying for months to collect an overdue bill from a local housewife and threats were completely disregarded. As a last resort, he sent a tear-jerking letter, accompanied by a snapshot of his little daughter. Under the picture he wrote: "The reason I must have my money."

PARENT PROBLEMS

Aiding the Poor Reader

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

A CHILD beyond the second grade who is a poor reader, is seriously handicapped in practically all his other school work. The major part of his learning the rest of his life will be from the printed page.

One mother writes:

"Dear Dr. Myers: My eight-year-old son, a third grader, is making no headway in understanding what he is reading. He is not interested in arithmetic. But now that he is in the grade where he must read much of his work is the hardest for all the subjects, he's having trouble, because he can't read well enough to make out the words. In helping him I find it is the simple, everyday words he misses, whereas he recognizes the longer and more difficult ones."

Trouble With Short Words

I answered her personally in about this way: Since your son finds his short words the trouble with the common, short words than with the long ones, he has been centering his attention on more unusual words rather than on ideas (meanings). Read aloud to him daily from pictured books which appeal to him and call to his attention phrases such as "jumped over the fence" or "ran under the table."

Even though you may have to help him with the story, through we would hope he would try to make some of the new books, which are obviously regarded. As a last resort, read the story to him. Then "Parents and the Child's Home Library" may be had in a standard envelope send me in care of this paper.

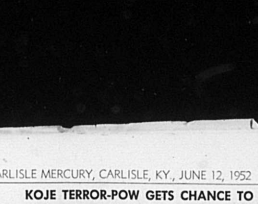
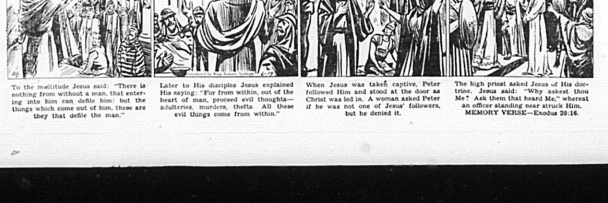
KOJE TERROR-POW GETS CHANCE TO COOL OFF



U.N. MILITARY POLICE prepare to lock up an unidentified Communist lieutenant colonel, declared to have been a jailer in Koje's rebellious Compound 86. Taken before Gen. Haydon Boatner, war prison camp commander, the Red officer became insolent and was ordered confined for a "cooling-off" period. Meanwhile, British troops were seeking escape tunnels in Compound 66. (International Soundphoto)

Obligation to be Truthful ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON By Alfred J. Buescher

Scriptures—Exodus 20:16; Mark 7:14-23; John 18:15-27.



To the multitude Jesus said: "There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, these are they that defile the man."

Later to His disciples Jesus explained His saying: "For from within, out of the heart of man, proceed evil thoughts—adulteries, murders, thefts. All these evil things come from within."

When Jesus was taken captive, Peter followed Him and stood at the door as Christ was led in. A woman asked Peter if he was not one of Jesus' followers, but he denied it.

The high priest asked Jesus of His doctrine. Jesus said: "Why asketh thou Me? Ask them that heard Me," whereat an officer standing near struck Him.

MEMORY VERSE—Exodus 20:16.
