UK SPEAKER RAPS SPECIALIZATION

In an address last week at the University of Kentucky, a Chicago theologian gave America's institutions of higher education a sharp slap on the wrist. Dr. Reinhart C. McGiffert, president of the Chicago Theological Seminary, charged that specialization is becoming the bane of American universities. Higher education he said, in its efforts to produce specialists has become so departmentalized that it prevents faculty and students alike from thinking effectively in matters outside their own particular fields of interest.

UK PRESS BUILDS GUIDE FOR TEACHERS

A book published last week by the University of Kentucky Press gives public school educators a clear guide to the teaching of moral and spiritual values without risk of violating the American tradition of church-state separation. Entitles "Moral and Spiritual Values in Education," the book was written by Dr. William Clayton Bower former professor of religious education at the University of Chicago. The program advocated by Dr. Bower does not call for the teaching of religion but, rather, for emphasis in the classroom and on the school playground of moral values.

Outstanding Performers

A number of outstanding musical performers will appear with the band. Featured vocalists will include Richard Gottres, a baritone famous for his singing of "Hit Parade" numbers, and Ben Mitchell Morris, a tenor whose singing has small-boy appeal and debonair worldliness that rocketed him to stardom.

Other stars of the Navy troupe include William Cameron, known as "The Angel with the $3,000 harp," Arlington Zetty, world famed pianist, Joseph Reines, fourth member of a famous family that has "monopolized" bassoon and small-bore saxophone in the country's best symphony orchestras, and Lt. Commander Homer L. Phillips, trombonist. Harold Brasch, often called the finest euphonium player in the world; Oscar B Short, famous tuba and bass violinist, Gordon Emlay and Robert Beasley, concert soloists, and Frank Somonelli, leader of the 74-piece English band.
