Let Us Remember

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
To April's breeze the flag unfurled,
Here once the embattled farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world.—

Since that spring day when a band of farmers and New Englanders shouldered their muskets to defend their home and country, thousands of American men and boys have stood in their places — in different times, and fought and died for their country and ours, America.

In later wars, they did not perhaps fully realize why they were called upon to make the sacrifice, yet they have died unnatural and untimely deaths in defense of their homeland.

Few of us today can boast of any achievement or record that will begin to equal the sacrifice of a white cross, among many, bearing the name of an American in some foreign land where so many perished.

It was for you, as well as themselves, that those men gave their lives. Fought and died so that you may run your business or raise your crop without fear that it may be seized by a ruthless and powerful government in which you have no voice.

Those who have stood by the side of their fallen comrades can well remember, sometimes too vividly, the blood and hell that is called, war, and under what conditions these fallen heroes have died.

It is with bowed heads and humble hearts that those who have lost loved ones in past conflicts, observe Memorial Day. Let the rest of us try to understand the price which they have paid. Let us re-dedicate ourselves to the great ideals for which they died, and with a prayer for them, strive to preserve that which cost so much to win.

Your Vote Is Important

"Our forefathers fought for the right to vote—but do we care much for that right today?" wrote Hugh Forster, Chairman, Civic Committee, Lancaster, Pennsylvania. "Apparently we don't!"

Mr. Forster then cited some facts which should make America ashamed of itself. In a recent election, 90 percent of Belgium's eligible voters went to the polls. Almost as many eligible Italian voters cast ballots in the election that rebuffed Communism, and 82 percent voted in the last British election. Other nations have comparable records. But only 51 percent of eligible Americans voted in the Presidential election of 1948.

It's an easy alibi to say that just one vote doesn't matter, so why take the trouble to visit the polls. The fact is that one vote can be overwhelmingly important. Mr. Forster described cases where a very small number of votes made history. As an example, in 1884 James Blaine lost New York State by much less than one vote per precinct. Had he carried New York he would have defeated Cleveland and become President.

Such exceptional cases to one side, every American freedom rides solidly on the right of franchise. The secret ballot is the greatest defense against tyranny ever devised in the tangled history of mankind. No one who fails to vote can call himself a good citizen. He is, instead, a shirker of the worst possible kind.—(I.N.S.)

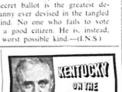
Say You Saw It In The Mercury



I see by the papers that Mack Sisk, formerly executive secretary to two Kentucky governors, has been set up as publicity director for the state. Publicity director is a fancy term for press agent. But in this case the title is merely incidental. Sisk's job is to sing the glories of Kentucky to the whole nation not to mention all the civilized countries in Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and South America. I hope he sings through the public prints as well as Carmel sang from the opera stage. Our state needs a lot of publicity.

Ten years back Kentucky people knew next to nothing about the value of publicity. Many of us like to boast about our horses and beautiful women, but that's as far as our ravings went. Up to that time the big world knew Kentucky only for its derby.

Jesse Stuart, the Kentucky author, tells a story that fits my point. Walking to hamlet near Edinburgh, Scotland, the habitat of the Greenup County Stuarts, he dig up a bit of genealogy and may be chat with distant relatives, he met a man old Sol not on the road.

"Good morning," was Jesse's greeting.

"What do sa mean by speaking to me?" replied the old man.

"We do it that way in Kentucky."

"What's Kentucky?"

"It's a state in America."

"Oh yes, hooses, hooses."

The Kentucky Derby is a household word practically all over the civilized world, but too much of the outside world knows little more about us than the old Scotsman.

Before Sisk's press bureau was set up Henry Ward, conservation commissioner, did much to publicize the scenic wonders of the state. For a couple of years I nagged at Ward about the absence of road signs directing people to Kentucky Dam, the state's biggest man-made wonder. There was no money available for road signs in Ward's office. He appealed to the state highway department for signs and about 50 reflector signs were bought. But these signs were all set up within a few miles of the dam and not at distant intersections to direct strangers to the dam. In contrast with the absence of signs for Kentucky Dam State Park one sees "See Rock City," on roofs and walls of barns on all the trunkline roads in the state and far up into Indiana and Illinois. Rock City is a privately owned group of stone buildings on Lookout Mountain. The average barn sign hitting you in the eyes is 25 feet wide.

Maybe Publicity Director Sisk can get some road signs for Kentucky Dam. Maybe Kentucky State Chamber of Commerce can help.

The Chamber of Commerce has a first-rate publicity bureau, with an able staff headed by Hugh Collett.

Recipe of the Week

Greens from the garden seem especially good when they are served with a center of rich red beets, say food specialists at the University of Kentucky.

Green Mold with Beets

1 gallon of greens
1 t. lemon juice
1 T. butter
1 t. salt
2 t. horseradish
1 c. grated cheese

Cook the washed greens in as little water as possible until tender but not over-cooked. Drain well and chop. Add all ingredients except cheese, and press mixture into a well buttered mold. Reheat in hot oven for five minutes, then turn onto a large plate. Serve with beets in the center and sprinkle cheese on the greens.

Harvard Beets: Make a sauce of 1 T. butter, 1 T. flour, ½ t. salt and vegetable liquid or water; add 1 t. of lemon juice, then combine with 2 c. cubed cooked beets. Serve in center of green mold.

Menu: Baked ham, green mold with beets, tossed spring salad, biscuits, butter and strawberry shortcake.

College Radio Schedule

Speakers from the University of Kentucky may be heard on radio station WHAS every Saturday at 10:30 a. m. CST. Scheduled for May 31 are the following and their subjects: Miss Katrin Kennedy, "The Importance of Child Development at UK;" 4-H skit members, "Highlights of 4-H Club Week," and Ray Hopper, "Purdue Supplement A."

Ross Brown will discuss, "Grass Tetany of Cattle," over station WAVE at 11:45 a. m. CST, on May 31.

300 ATTEND MEETING OF TAX SPECIALISTS

Approximately 300 attorneys and accountants from Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio and Tennessee attended the third annual Kentucky Institute on Accounting and Tax Practice's Forthcoming Fall Session at the University of Kentucky, July 31. Jointly sponsored by the College of Commerce at the University, the Kentucky Society of Certified Public Accountants and the Kentucky State Bar Association, the institute and forum were made up of timely talks and panel discussions on matters of accounting and taxation.

Senator Truman Again? Could Happen in 1956

Missouri Senate Seat Expires in Four Years

Special to Central Press

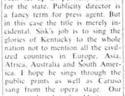
WASHINGTON—Close friends of President Truman expect him to wind up his political career in the legislative chamber where he spent much of the time he has called the best 10 years of his life — the United States Senate.

Mr. Truman has made it plain that he will not seek a Senate seat this year, because he believes it will be improper for him to use the prestige of the presidency for such a purpose.

However, the term of Missouri's Democratic senator, Forrest Donnell, expires in 1956, and he is expected to bow out in favor of the man who by that time will have been three years as vice President.

Mr. Truman will be 72 years old in 1956, but he firmly intends to be a vigorous septuagenarian, willing and able to return to Congress in the role of an administration critic or supporter, depending on which party is in power.

Presidential intimates say that when he leaves the White House the ex-Army Infantryman, Mr. Truman will remain a very active participant in public affairs, slowly but surely setting the stage for a political comeback in 1956.



President Truman

● KOREAN DEADLOCK — United States officials say they see no sign of a break in the deadlocked Korean truce talks although there have been repeated reports that the United Nations and Communist negotiators are near an agreement.

Despite the latest breakdown over prisoner exchanges, Washington does not rule out the possibility that a settlement could come at any time. On the other hand, officials say the talks could drag on for months into the future.

Knowledge that about half of the Red prisoners in UN hands do not wish to be exchanged poses a stiff decision for the Communist leadership. They can scarcely afford to break off the talks completely at such a stage because of the tremendous propaganda benefits which would accrue to the UN forces.

Therefore, how long the negotiations will continue is anybody's guess. There had been speculation that the talks might strive to work out an agreement by May 1 — the Communists' "Holy Day." However, the UN powers put no stock in such an assumption.

● VOTE — Congressman Oakley Hunter (R), California, has come up with some sound arguments as to why everyone eligible should cast ballots.

Hunter points out, for instance, that Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams and Rutherford B. Hayes each got into the White House on the basis of a single vote.

When Hayes' election was contested, a huge vote in the Electoral Commission decided the issue in his favor. That vote was cast by an Indiana congressman who was himself elected to Congress by a majority of — a vote.

Hunter also loses to point out that just one vote gave statehood to California, Idaho, Oregon, Texas and Washington.

Who said a single ballot goes unnoticed?

● A PENNY SAVED — Congressmen eager to do some economizing in the huge $31 billion military budget called Gen. John K. Cannon, commander of the Tactical Air Force, to testify and were astonished by what he told them.

According to Rep. Albert Gore (D), Tennessee, Cannon made a very nice speech about how economicas he was and how he was trying to set an example in his command.

Gore continued: "When we asked how he came here, he told us he came in a plane, a C-54, and he admitted also that although he is 60 years of age, he took his turn at the controls in order to draw flight pay."

Gore concluded: "That is a remarkable example of economy."

Wonder what he said as he walked out of the water?—Coach Tebby Rose was fishing early one morning last week in the upper lake at the city reservoir when he hooked into about an eight pound bass. Running up and down the bank with him for about ten minutes, Tebby finally drug him in. As he got the fish's tail out of the water, Mr. Bass rose up, flung off the hooks, and thinking it safer, retreated back into the lake. Tebsy, seeing his prize fading before his eyes, plunged in after him, and managed to grab him with his hands. Mr. Bass wriggled loose and swam away, again however, leaving Tebsy standing rather dejectedly in the water—Enough to make any fisherman cry, huh?

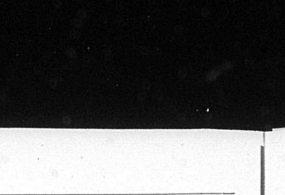
The clinic was sponsored by the Department of University Extension with the cooperation of the Frankfort Writers Club and the recently organized Creative Writing group of the University's Northern Extension Center at Covington.

Remove Buttons Before Washing

Many of the new cotton dresses have jewel-like buttons as a decoration or fastening. Miss Ruth Guenther, clothing instructor at UK, warns that such buttons should be removed before the garments are washed. The "jewels" are usually held in their sockets with glue, which dissolves in water.

FRUITS OF VICTORY



PARENT PROBLEMS

Preparing Child for School

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

NOW is the time when wise young parents are thinking of the real ways of preparing the child to start to school next fall. The summer roundup program of the PTA has stimulated this thinking.

Accordingly, parents of children who will enter the kindergarten or first grade next fall are urged to bring their children to school on a certain day to have them gone over by a physician and dental surgeon. The doctor and dentist, who usually contribute their services, apprise the parents of the degree of physical soundness of the child's body and teeth, advising them to go with the child to the family doctor and dentist for remedial care to correct any discovered defects.

Best Home Guidance

Where there is a school psychologist a mental test may be given each child and his parents counseled on his best mental and emotional guidance at home. Also the principal, or the teacher the child will have, may offer some useful suggestions on the child's home training, as in self-reliance, physical and emotional responsibility, respect for the rights of others and need of play with other children of his age.

All too many parents of the child who will enter school next fall are eager to know how they can give him book learning before that time, supposing that if he can read and spell a little, write his name and do some acting and subtracting, he will have an advantage at school. This is not me in care of this paper.

what the school would advise these parents to do. Rather they would keep their attention away from formal education now.

Every teacher is heartily concerned that this child shall be able to look after his things, walk on himself and feel comfortable and happy among his schoolmates; that he be self-reliant physically and emotionally, not over-dependent on his mother.

Reading to Child

Some teachers are also urging the parents to read aloud to this child. Practically all teachers will do so by-and-by. Furthermore, they are beginning to advise parents to read to the baby as soon as he will listen, and to continue reading to him till well past the time when he enters school. Most persons trained in recent years to teach are so advising young parents.

Many teachers have been greatly impressed with the richness of vocabulary, and ease of verbal expression and good habits of attention (concentration) in the child thus read to at home by oldsters, more and more teachers are reading to children at school, even in the upper grades and high school. As a result, the old silly ways of tearing apart the classics, like picking petals from a rose, is giving place to enjoyment of the beauty in those treasures.

The foregoing ideas, and others, appear more at length, in my bulletins, "Books from Which To Read To Baby and Young Child," and "Parents Can Help Their Children Succeed at School" to be had in a stamped envelope sent to me in care of this paper.

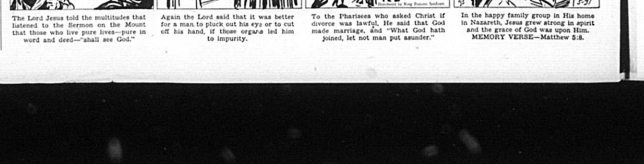
Christ's Standard of Moral Purity

ILLUSTRATED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By Alfred J. Buescher

Scripture—Exodus 20:14; Matthew 5:8, 13-16, 27-32; Mark 10:7-12; Luke 2:40.



The Lord Jesus told the multitudes that listened to the Sermon on the Mount that those who live pure lives—pure in word and deed—shall see God."

Again the Lord said that it was better for a man to pluck out his eye or to cut off his hand, if those organs led him to impurity.

To the Pharisees who asked Christ if divorce was lawful, He said that God made marriage, and "What God hath joined, let not man put asunder."

In the happy family group in His home in Nazareth, Jesus grew strong in spirit and the grace of God was upon Him.

MEMORY VERSE—Matthew 5:8.

HAY PRODUCTION BOOSTED SIX TIMES

W. W. Durham of Marino county increased hay production on his farm by almost six times over a period of three years. In, 1949, he put up 741 bales; in 1950, 1,-330 bales, and 1951, 4,416 bales plus a large crop of fescue and orchard grass seed. Mr. Durham told Gilbert H. Karnes, University of Kentucky farm agent, that ample amounts of phosphate and lime, and liberal applications of poultry manure were responsible for the big increase.
