News In The World Of Religion

The Bank of Hawaii's impressive bronze doors of another era, mountain holders, and Swiss chalet windows have been built into the new Palolo Community Methodist Church in a previously unchurched suburb of Honolulu, Hawaii. The Rev. Floyd H. Sullivan is a minister-by-pastor. Among the other materials being used in this composite church to serve a cosmopolitan neighborhood are transite roofing from a Chinese paint shop, a Hebrew store front, a Russian church candelabrum and a fire crane from a Mormon temple. A Catholic friend contributed temple grass.

It is just a small group of elderly ladies that meets once a week at the Friends Meeting House, New York City, to sew for the needy. But the other day they sent upon its way the 500,000th new garment in twelve years to cover the body and lift the spirit of some small war victim overseas. In 1952 these quiet sewers produced 35,844 new garments and 973 layettes. Their production figure is thirty-eight tons of new clothes each year for their fellowmen in Europe and Asia.

One of the most serious of modern sins is "complacency," according to Mrs. W. H. Ratliff, of Sherard, Miss., Chairman of the status of women committee of the Woman's Society of Christian Service, Methodist Church. Pointing out that there are a million and a half more women than men of working age in the U.S., Mrs. Ratliff said: "Women have a tremendous potential ability which needs to be awakened, trained, and channelled into constructive purposes. We dare not lift our voices against life as we find it. We need to become mentally and spiritually mature and accept places of responsibility when and where we find them. Our concern is that our gifts will be used in such a way that church, community, nation, and world be enriched."

"It was one of the most satisfactory periods of work I have ever had," says the Rev. Lyman C. Brannon, veteran Methodist missionary to Korea, who has returned to the United States after a year's extensive evangelistic work in his old mission field. In 1951, although officially retired, Mr. Brannon and Dr. Bliss W. Billings (of Kilsca and the Philippines) were invited to South Korea for the evangelistic campaign. Both were fluent in the Korean language, and both were experienced evangelists. Speaking of the work they had done, Mr. Brannon said he had never before found the people so open to the message as they are today. "It is too bad we have so few missionaries just at this time," he says. "If we only had the workers, we could establish churches everywhere."

There is no immediate danger that India will become communist, say the four bishops of the Methodist Church in that country. (Two of them are Americans, two Indians.) But they warn: "Nevertheless we cannot ignore the fact that there are pockets of communistic influence in the country, and that they did gain in certain parts of India in the last election. To these may also be added the poor economic condition resulting in the low standards of living of the people, and the ever present spectre of famine, and the general scarcity of food. These are the factors which may well be regarded as constituting a source for the potential spread of communism in India. Through it God is calling the churches everywhere to examine their lives in humility and penitence. We must face our failure to strive for the realization of justice in the social order, and our lack of effort to establish the brotherhood of man. We are challenged today to take a firm stand in demanding human rights for all irrespective of race and color, and to work for the removal of oppression."

Arab refugees from Palestine who have weathered four winters in tattered tents must be given flour, beans, margarine, oil, milk distribution centers, and places to bathe their babies and to do laundry, says the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. They also need health clinics, better sanitation, tent schools, classes in weaving, embroidery and carpentry. They need blankets and new tents. There are never enough tents to go around. Families having caves or holes in which to live have small hope of getting a tent. Our mission schools employ a few refugees as teachers, and raise funds so that they can admit as many refugee students as possible," says the Board. Of last year's student body of 380 at Gerard Institute for Boys in Sidon, Lebanon, 100 were refugees. The refugees are losing hope that they will ever return to their homes in Palestine. They feel that few people know or care about their plight."

State Welfare Schools Graduate 83 Students

Eighty-three students were graduated from schools in four institutions operated by the State Department of Welfare, according to an announcement from the department.

Thirty-six students graduated from the eighth grade four at the Woman's Prison at Pewee Valley, fourteen at the Kentucky Children's Home at Lyndon and eighteen at Kentucky Village at Greendale. In addition, eight boys and girls were graduated from the eighth grade at Kentucky Village and one student completed the commercial course at the institution.

In addition to six graduates of the academic school at the Kentucky State Reformatory on June 1, there were also thirty-two graduates of the vocational school. The vocational students received their leather work certificates in vocational fields including printing, commercial auto mechanics, barber training, tailoring, welding, woodworking, shoe repair, radio repair, electrical work, and music.

Institutional education in the Department of Welfare institutions is under the direction of M. J. Clarke.

Nearly half of Kentucky's farm land is used for pasture—more than is used for harvested crops.

Auditor Praises Bookmobile Program

The State's bookmobile program — by which library facilities are furnished rural areas where no such service previously existed — today drew warm praise from the State Auditor.

In a report covering services and functions of the Library Extension Division, State Auditor T. Herbert Tinsley reported that it had — with a comparatively small amount of funds — "rendered invaluable service through its traveling libraries."

"The recent law creating a Public Library Service Commission and establishing a public library service fund will, no doubt, greatly expand public library service through co-operation and support of local agencies, organizations and individuals," Tinsley continued.

"The use of bookmobiles, donated by friends and operated by the Division prior to the new law, has furnished convincing evidence of the potentialities of this type of service in improving the service to rural people. Those served and most especially in rural areas, where it was needed.

"While the bookmobiles were donated, the cost of administration became a burden on limited funds of the Division. Administration of the program will necessitate an expansion of the staff of the Library Extension Service in providing book supervision. This, however, will be a worth while service and it is estimated that 80 per cent of the people living in rural areas have had no free public library service funds."

The Practice of Christian Liberty

PAUL WRITES "THE LAW IS FULFILLED IN THIS, THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF."

Scripture—Galatians 5-6.

By NEWMAN CAMPBELL

THERE ARE so many fine lessons to be learned in the two short chapters which bring to a close Paul's epistle to the Galatians. Doubtless many fine helpful sermons have been preached from them, and more will be.

Liberty is a word which is much bandied about in the world today. We all desire liberty for ourselves and theoretically for all humanity. However, when we have it, do we always use it for our good or for the good of others? Liberty is not license. Children when given liberty use it for doing lawless and destructive acts, and we adults often fall into the same fault.

Paul writes to the Galatians: "Ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. For all the law

MEMORY VERSE

"For ye brethren, were called for freedom; only use not your freedom for an occasion to the flesh, but through love be servants one to another."—Galatians 5:13.

is fulfilled in one word, even this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Walk in the Spirit," Paul urges the Galatians, "and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh."

From childhood to old age human beings are in constant warfare within themselves—between what they know what is right and the urge to do what pleases the flesh. Paul lists a large number of these evil urges which we must avoid if we would inherit the kingdom of God. Some of them are: idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seductions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law."

How much more appealing is the list of virtues if we can only attain them. The man, woman or child who lives as Paul (and Jesus) would have us would experience liberty and happiness. He would be a successful life, if he was either just a common person or a world-famous one.

Ending the fifth chapter to his friends in Galatia, Paul writes: "Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another." Many of my readers have probably had my experience of hearing a sermon, one of some of which they liked, when I felt that person better, that his life was less to be envied than mine.

Beginning chapter six, Paul advises that "if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

How easy it is to condemn those who do wrong. What does Shakespeare say . . . I will chide no breather in the world but myself, against whom I know most faults." Jesus forgave sinners and He Himself was sinless. We, who are full of faults, surely should be expected to be gentle with others

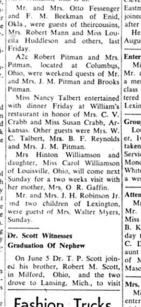
Fashion Tricks



By VERA WINSTON

SIMPLE and easy to wear, yet blessed with 'an important air is this outfit that has the appearance of a coat and dress ensemble. The low round neck and short sleeves are bordered with white and navy polka dots for a crisp contrast to the navy shantung of the frock which buttons from top to hem. A smart notion indeed is that the dress, when opened reveals an underskirt of polka dotted print for a redingote effect.
