

Water Situation Calls For Plans For Next Season

For many farmers the critical point in getting livestock ready for the winter may not be the feed on the farm, unless abundant funds are available to purchase the most desirable stock of the season. It is the water situation that is the real problem.

For livestock water the water problem is the construction of good feedlot and barnyard water systems at the farm. Cost of such structures are not excessive, plans may be obtained from county agents or from the Agricultural Engineering Station, University of Kentucky.
