"Operation Four-Thousand"

On 1 December 1953, the Kentucky National Guard will launch an intensive three months' recruiting drive. The drive is called "OPERATION 4000" and is designed to bring the army strength of the Kentucky National Guard to 4000 members. This drive is important to the Commonwealth of Kentucky and to each of us as individuals. It is the most important undertaking in the long and outstanding history of the Kentucky National Guard.

Your Kentucky National Guard presently consists of over 60 army units strategically located throughout Kentucky ready to serve you on call. To make the Kentucky National Guard the efficient organization it is designated to be, approximately 2000 more recruits are necessary to bring the Kentucky National Guard to be, desired strength.

In addition to bolstering the defense of our state and nation, the National Guard offers many opportunities to its individual members as well as to the community in which it is located.

Under the present draft policy, if a young man joins the Kentucky National Guard before reaching the age of 18½, he can serve his community and country and still go to school or begin a career without having to go on active military duty, unless his unit is ordered to active duty in case of a national emergency. By virtue of the location of a National Guard unit in your city, the members of the unit benefit from the pay they receive as members of the National Guard, the community benefits from this money being spent in your home town; and in many instances you, as a citizen of Kentucky, acquire valuable community property by the erection or construction of armories or other allied buildings in your community.

A strong National Guard also is reflected in our tax burden as it costs only a fraction as much to maintain a citizen-soldier in time of peace as it does a full-time soldier. The tax money thus spent for the National Guard provides aid for disaster victims, trains citizen soldiers, and provides the bulwark of a defensive system needed in these troubled times.

The Exhibit is being sponsored by the Nashville Civic Arts Association and will continue through the month of December. By Orinne Johnson

In 89 of the 120 counties in Kentucky, there are 115 home economists called home demonstration agents, for whom there is never a dull moment. As appointees of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics and the United States Department of Agriculture, these women are engaged in the promotion of better rural living. They have an important part in the well organized program of home demonstration work headed up by Miss Myrtle Weldon, state leader, and her corps of supervisors and assistants.

The home demonstration program in a county is carried on principally through study groups known as homemakers clubs, which more or less follow a neighborhood pattern. Upon coming to a county the home demonstration agent learns the interests and problems of its citizens, and guides the club members as they plan long-time and year-to-year projects. A series of lessons may relate to a particular phase or phases of homemaking such as home furnishings, clothing, crafts, child care, home management, food preparation, preservation or nutrition.

Inasmuch as a home agent cannot possibly do all the organizing or teaching, each club elects two of its members to serve as volunteer leaders or lay teachers. They receive special training from the HDA or specialist, and then relay that information to the members of their clubs. This develops leadership among rural women, a fundamental principle of the home demonstration program.

The HDA arranges for the help of specialists from the University, schedules meetings, helps to set goals for clubs, gives talks and demonstrations, makes home visits, advises on home or community problems, and assists in the organization and carrying out of the 4-H club program in the county. She uses a wide variety of techniques in her teaching—demonstrations, exhibits, tours, slides, movies, posters, publications, radio, newspapers, circular letters, and TV, where available.

The home agent works closely with county-wide committees and 11 groups such as the County Advisory Extension Council, the Homemakers improvement, recreation, of public welfare. She cooperates also with other groups in the county, such as bankers, business and professional men and women, farm organizations, schools and churches.

During the past year, a total of 92,465 families in Kentucky reported using improved methods in homemaking as a result of knowledge gained through the home demonstration program.

UNIVERSITY EDITOR ELECTED BY BOARD

Allan Smith, publications editor and head of the Department of Public Information and Education at the University of Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, has been elected chairman of the Board of Control of the National Project in Agricultural Communications. He succeeds Francis C. Byrnes of Ohio State University. Byrnes resigned from the chairmanship to become associate director of the project. Purpose of the project is to assist landgrant institutions and the U. S. Department of Agriculture in using mass communications to develop and maintain educational services for farmers, homemakers and the general public.

UK RESEARCH GROUP RELEASES FINDINGS

The University of Kentucky's Bureau of Business Research released a study this week which shows that residents of Jefferson County will receive about $1,500 million in income payments in 1960 instead of the $900 million paid in 1951 if the recent trend in income payments continues without interruption. This will amount to about $2,600 per capita in 1960 compared to the $1,865 paid to Jefferson countians in 1951 if the population growth continues at the same rate as from 1930 to 1950.

'Bear' Facts—

By PAUL BRYANT
UK Football Coach

At first blush, it might seem vain of me to be recommending two of Kentucky's top football players as candidates on an All-America team of eleven men and it could be downright premature foolishness since (as of this writing) the Tennessee game is still to be played.

But, I would like to take this occasion to explain why I feel we deserve to place two men on anybody's All-America selections. While I firmly believe that it is a little silly to pick these "All" teams before the end of the season, I day when you consider we've have co-operated with the pollsters in honestly naming a team including Kentucky standouts Ray Correll and Steve Meilinger.

Nobody realizes better than I do that All-Americans are made by the other men on the team who block for them or otherwise make them look good and I would hesitate to name any candidates who did not recognize the fact that they are stars only by virtue of the help given by unrecognized and under rated team players.

I am certain that both of our All-Americans realize this assistance.

Somerset's Correll, an outstanding guard who has overcome the handicap of a lack of offensive experience and who did not have the pre-season publicity buildup, rates in my book as an All-American because he is better than any lineman we have ever had here at Kentucky. That takes in a lot of territory and speaks well for his candibeen fortunate to have boys like Bob Gain (All-America tackle 1949-50), Jay Rhodemyer (Most Valuable Player All-Star Game), Walt Yowarsky (Most Valuable Player Sugar Bowl Game 1951) and others. Ray is terrific on defense, particularly one of the best punt coverers I have ever seen, and no slouch on offense. He's a true team player and a fine leader.

Meilinger is without a doubt the nation's most versatile football player. He's an excellent receiver, a fine runner, good blocker, terrific kicker, gets the job done passing when necessary, and plays all over the field on defense. He returns punts and kickoffs like a scatback with half the size of his 6-3, 229 pounds. Steve plays any position well and has unselfishly helped our team cause by filling in wherever he was needed, whether it be halfback, quarterback, end, or what have you. In short, he does so many things so well that we rate him as the greatest all-around player in college circles today.

With our Steve and Ray, I guess we would sure have been up against it this year. But, as much as they deserve All-America recognition,—there also should be some honor heap for the rest of the boys who helped them immeasurably and contributed greatly to our surprising success.

Carlisle 4-H Club
By Becky Barlow

The Carlisle 4-H Club held its regular meeting on November 19. Our new president, Betty Lou Vice led us in the flag salute.

Sylvia McCarty led us in singing America, the 4-H pledge and two new choruses.

In the business session it was decided to divide the club in to two groups, Junior and Senior.

Talks were given by Betty Lou Vice—The Duty of the President, Norman Jean Hollar—Being a good vice-president; Wanda Lawrence —The work of the Secretary; Becky Barlow—The Job of a Reporter, and Mrs. Nelle Brayfield —The Achievements for the year. Plans for the new year were then given.

At the next meeting we are planning to honor our county champions and present our achievement certificates.

HIGHER BUS FARES

Examiner Ben K. Wilmot of the State Department of Motor Transportation recommended higher bus fares for the Northern Kentucky area, calculated to provide two bus lines an additional $88,000 a year in gross revenues, to offset the effects of a newly negotiated wage increase for its workmen.

TOO MUCH SPEED

Too much speed is being built into automobiles and manufacturers should slow them down, the Kentucky Association of Insurance Agents decided at a recent meeting in Louisville.

A resolution adopted at the meeting suggested a maximum speed "which will permit automobiles to be operate on public highways with a greater degree of safety."

Tidbits Of Kentucky Folklore

By Dr. Gordon Wilson

"YOU IN YOUR SMALL CORNER"

Last week I laughed at myself and others for expecting Indians to live up to what are expected of them by retaining their picturesque dress and habits, even though we would feel insulted if people wanted us to dress and act and talk like people who lived in horse and buggy days. However, distinctiveness, even to the point of being queer or attracting unfavorable comment, has its values, too. Little in the bleak desert around them to challenge man to be more nearly modern. If those old ladies and the rest of us were to become thoroughly standardized, folklore would have to go out of business except as a reminder of the times when people were different, even though they may have lived only a few miles away.

There is no desire on the part of the folklorist to stop the progression, least of all to reintroduce folkish things that have wisely passed away. I can think of nothing sillier than for modern people to start doing things as their ancestors did for no other reason than to be different; insincerity is infinitely worse than ignorance or being behind the times. his effort to turn back the clock always reminds me of the enthusiastic French romanticists, lords and ladies of the court, who became so enamored of an imaginary rural life that they had read about or dreamed about that they dressed as shepherds and milkmaids and went about singing songs that they imagined proper for such primitive children of nature. They were just about as real peasants as people who frequent dude ranches are cowboys.

On the other hand, it is equally silly for us to discard the customs of our ancestors merely because they are old. Certain customs are pretty good as they are and are not to be laughed at even though many other people have dropped them. We rejoice in the recipes that careful descendants have preserved from the telling of Grandma; we proudly display the handiwork of some little-known ancestor and feel ashamed at the same time that we, with our superior advantages, cannot do equally well. I think it a very fine thing that in some faiths it is still the custom to christen the newest arrival in the family in the robe worn by some ancestor or ancestress, even a remote one. And it must be a strange and beautiful thing when a girl chooses to be married in her mother's or grandmother's wedding dress. The mere fact that the dress is old is not the big fact; the sacred tying of generation to generation is a larger fact. The ceremony is likely to be indentical to the one used long ago; the other things that would not spoil the flavor of the occasion.

Quaint folk ways of saying things, of greeting each other, of facing the problems that are all around us are not to be laughed at. All such ways are carried originally in some quaint way, maybe as an imitation of some one else; but ages have hallowed them. They just like our speech, are not to be laughed out of court merely because they are not exactly like what is done in every other part of the civilized world. Dozens of people whom I know go to Europe for the flavor of the peasantry, a flavor that they could find in their own counties, as genuine and as ancient as anything France or Great Britain or Germany could offer. But the fact that such things are across the ocean gives them a value that our folk things can never acquire. It takes a foreigner, often, like Dorakis, to find in our American folk music, for instance, the makings of a great symphony. Millions of Americans have been exposed to these same folk influences without ever suspecting that they have artistic possibilities. Maybe it is not too bad when you and I dare to look and act differently; why should we always be alike?

New Tax Booklet Offered Public

A listing of local property tax rates for each county and taxing district in Kentucky has been issued by the Research Staff of the Department of Revenue.

The booklet "Kentucky Property Tax Rates, 1953" gives the classes of property subject to tax and the rate that is then levied by each taxing district. Special taxes, such as drainage, library levy, and school building taxes, are shown.

The publication shows Wolfe and Leslie with the highest county tax rates of $11.15, while Crawford has the lowest property levy of 3 cents per $100 of assessed valuation. School tax rates range from 90 cents in Woodford County to $2.27 in the Paducah independent school district. City property tax rates run from 10 cents in Gilbertsville to $1.79 in Paducah.

Research Director, William G. Herzel, noted that these rates are applied to assessed values which for real estate on the average may be as low as 30 per cent of the actual value. There is considerable variation in the ratios among the classes of property and among the taxing jurisdictions.

Copies of the booklet may be had on request to the Research Staff of the Kentucky Department of Revenue in Frankfort.
