The Hunt Is Off

The hunt is off. The disappointing news came Monday morning as the weather continued clear with no visible signs of rain.

The town as a whole was eager for the hunt and its citizens showed the type of enthusiasm over the affair which would go a long way toward insuring the general success of the event.

Forhunters, of course, were disappointed too. The hounds and horses were in readiness to follow the course of the fox. The promise of a good hunt and good fellowship made the postponement even more regretful.

However, the weather is one thing that human beings cannot control. If it rains within the next two weeks, the hunt may be held the first week in November. If it doesn't rain within that time the event will necessarily have to be held later on in November, again providing that it rains somewhere along the way.

So, although the hunt is off now, if will be on again shortly. Local citizens will just have to work even harder to make it a success. We believe they will.

Two Windows

In East Berlin, the Communist government has created a so-called "miracle mile" and named it Stalin Allee. It consists of block after block of big, attractive and modern apartments, and is supposed to demonstrate to the people the wonders of communism.

It is doubtful, however, if this effort is completely successful. Doris Fleeson, the well known American columnist, recently wrote one of her articles from Berlin. She had visited the retail shops in the Russian sector, all of which are state-owned, to learn what people fortunate enough to get space in the new apartment buildings could buy to put in them. She found that the goods offered were of extremely poor quality for the most part—and, in terms of the wages earned by East Berlin workers, "prohibitively expensive." The only bargain, by U. S. standards, was caviar at $20 for a two-and-a-half-pound can!

You might keep this in mind next time you walk into an American retail store.

The Key To Peace

In 1941, the Laymen's National Committee, a strictly non-sectarian organization, first sponsored National Bible Week. The idea was, and is, to encourage everyone to read the Bible a few moments each day, in the belief that this will help greatly in solving our individual and collective problems.

This year the Week will be observed for the 13th time, beginning October 19. The theme is, The Bible, the Key to Peace." A letter theme could not have been chosen. For certainly it is clear that if peace ever is to come again to this troubled world, there must be a tremendous resurgence of spiritual values—and of those principles of conduct which the Bible stands for.

Read your Bible during the week—and every day thereafter.

BLADES of BLUEGRASS

By Boyd Kenan

One of the most interesting things about Me on a college or university campus these days is the chance one has to meet persons not only from distant sections of America but also those from other parts of the world.

For instance, 17 high school teachers from Germany arrived on the University of Kentucky campus recently. Those nine women and eight men, all mature persons with years of teaching experience, already have delighted many faculty and staff members with their direct method of inquiry into American ways.

Questions asked by the German teachers run something like this:

What are these "old folks homes" we hear about in America and why do you put somebody's grandparents in such institutions? How do you bury your dead? What sort of funeral and marriage ceremonies do you have in America? What are your Negro schools like and do all your teachers have real freedom in the classroom?

The particular group is visiting the United States under an educational exchange program sponsored by the U. S. Office of Education and the U. S. State Department. Broad purpose of the program is to develop understanding between the U. S. and other countries of the world.

The teachers will remain in Lexington through Feb. 1, and the State Department has asked that they be given opportunities to participate in as many American "institutions" as possible during this period in order that they may be able to interpret a democratic way of life to their own people.

UK's Ellis Hartford is serving as co-ordinator for this program, and his chief problem is to select a schedule of "American" events for the teachers. Just what affairs here in Kentucky are typical of American life? It's a big question, but Dr. Hartford has some ideas.

Planned along with trips are visits to Berea College, Tennessee Valley Authority plants and Oak Ridge, Tenn. Also, Dr. Hartford hopes to take the group to religious services, weddings, funerals and burials, PTA meetings, city council sessions, sports events and schools in both metropolitan and mountainous areas.

Six colleges were selected as locations for 100 German teachers in this program, but only UK and the University of Illinois are centers for high school teachers.

The Garden

Planning gardens for next year includes plowing this fall and sowing a cover crop or spreading manure, says John S. Gardner of the University of Kentucky, writer of the popular series, "The Garden."

Frost, which has already come in some places, brings an end to gardening, except for late cabbage, late greens and turnips. A cover crop of rye can still be sown. Gardner says to sow at about double the usual rate.

If no cover crop is sown and the garden is level enough not to wash, breaking may be done after frost has severed the vegetables tops. Turned under in partly green condition, they readily change to humus. The same is true of fall stands of crabgrass, wiregrass and foxtail.

If this killed vegetation is permitted to stay through the winter, it will become tough and unworkable when the garden is prepared next spring. If it is disked off or burned, valuable organic matter is conserved. Most Kentucky soils need more humus, Gardner said.

Farmers who have manure, should consider plowing the garden this fall and then applying manure during the winter and leaving and thawing, break down the manure and make it usable at once.

However, hillside gardens, and gardens on even moderate slopes, should not be plowed, but should be sown to a cover crop to prevent washing.
