Vigo Wheat Grown In Estill County

Bulan Alvin of Crooked Creek and Glynn Witt of Irvine combined 80 acres of Vigo wheat to sell for seed. The yield was around 25 bushels an acre, but would have been 30 to 35 bushels had not storms damaged the crop according to UK County Agent Fred Brockman. Some of the wheat was sold locally to be sown for cover crops, and some will be stored at the support price of $2.34 a bushel. Brockman thinks more wheat will be grown in Estill county as a result of the experience of these two farmers.

Suggestions Given On Sowing Grasses

Farmers planning to sow grasses this fall may be interested in the following suggestions made by the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics:

"Fall seeding of Kentucky bluegrass is particularly advisable," Sept. 19 to 20 may be regarded as the most favorable time. Good stands may be obtained, as a rule, by sowing as late as Nov. 1, but the plants may make such a small growth before freezing weather that they may be lifted out of the ground during the winter.

"Young orchard grass is not so winter-hardy as other grasses, and unless the seed is sown by Oct. 1 it is better to wait until late winter.

"Kentucky 31 fescue seeded after Oct. 1 especially if sown alone, may make little growth before winter, and consequently many of the seedlings may be lifted during winter and spring freezes.

"Late-summer seedings of orchard grass and Ky. 31 fescue without a nurse crop provide good ground covering during the winter and much grazing in the spring if soil moisture conditions are good at seeding and during the fall."

In Crittenden county, 56 farmers are conducting tests on the use of heavy applications of fertilizer on all important crops.

Many improvements have been noted in both schools. In the county elementary schools the buildings have been repaired and the Myers school is being painted. A new cistern has been completed at the Nicholas county high school. Improvements in the kitchen and dining room of the Parks school have been made and the ceiling in the school has been plastered and the entire interior has been painted.

Squirrel Season May Be Interrupted If Drought Continues

Unless hunters are more careful of fires in the fields, and woods, there is a possibility of the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources closing the squirrel season until the threat of woods fires is passed. Earl Wallace, Commissioner of the Department, declared today. The squirrel season opened on September 15, and since that time reports of several forest fires, due to carelessness of hunters, have been received, Mr. Wallace said.

Fields Too Dry

In issuing the warning the Commissioner pointed out that much of the state is suffering from a prolonged drought, and danger of forest fires, such as were experienced last fall, is increasing day by day. "The fields and woods, especially in the western section of the state, are a tinder box", Mr. Wallace declared, "and unless extreme care is used by hunters thousands of dollars in damage may be caused." He urged hunters to refrain from smoking while hunting and not to set camp fires unless extreme care is used.

The Commissioner declared that if the Commission is forced to close the season until rains come the number of days that it is closed will be added on to the regular season. That is, should the season be closed for 10 days, those 10 days would be added onto the end of the season, thereby giving the hunters the number of days of hunting as originally set.

12 Committees Named To Plan For Fox Hunt

Farm Bureau Set Policy Meeting

Farm Bureau members in Nicholas county will have an opportunity to "talk over and decide" issues concerning agriculture, according to Charles Scheffler, county Farm Bureau president. Eight community meetings will be held on Friday night, September 11.

The county Farm Bureau Resolutions Committee will hold a series of community Policy Development (P.D.) meetings to get the thinking of the man on the farm, Scheffler said, in order that they can present these views on agricultural and local issues to the county Farm Bureau for approval. The policy can be forwarded to the state Farm Bureau in this manner.

County Farm Bureau board members agreed to act as chairmen at the community policy development meetings.

Only where seats are free do we have issues to decide, and this Farm Bureau's way of reaching a decision on agriculture issues as democratically as possible," Scheffler said, "and we hope as many Farm Bureau members as possible will attend the meetings to help Farm Bureau decide what course to chart in 1954."

Members of the Nicholas County Resolutions Committee are: Raymond House, chairman; B. C. Clark and Noble Gillispie.

#2

Organizational plans for the coming Central Kentucky Fox hunt which will be held on the Clay Farm in October began to materialize this week with the announcement of 12 committees to work for the success of the hunt.

The main problem facing co-chairmen Roger Womack and Roy Blount at this early date, according to them, are housing accomodations for the hunters and stabling arrangements for the horses.

Womack called on all residents of the city who have rooms they could rent to the hunters to please contact any member of the rooms reservation committee or Mrs. Hobart Stall, chairman of the committee.

Stalls Needed

Also, the co-chairmen called on all farmers of the Cassidy Creek section near the Clay Farm to contact the stall committee if they have any vacant stalls in which horses could be quartered. Ralph Shearer is chairman of the stall committee and others serving with him are Lew Tyrer, Emmett Darrell and Robert G. Harper.

Co-chairman Roger Womack, in naming the committees, emphasized that every committee will be expected to organize each detail of its phase of the hunt to insure that the hunting will run smoothly.

Day-break casts on the extensive 4,750 acre Clay farm will be held each day. Also included in the two day program will be a bench show and reund and square dances.

The local sponsoring organizations for the hunt this year include the Nicholas County Fox-hunters Association, the Nicholas Fish and Game club and the Carlisle-Nicholas County Development Association.

Miss Ann Galbraith is serving as secretary for this years hunt.

Local Board of Education Releases Statement Concerning Scholastic Standing of City High School

Recently there has been little stress put on whether a school was "A" or "B", but rather if it carried a program worthy of being credited and the number of students necessary to carry on such a program.

Carlisle meets all state qualifications for the highest credit rating but last year due to an enrollment in the upper four grades of a few less than 100, a rating of "AE" was given due to this one deficiency. This in no way lessened the credit standing of the high school so Carlisle is still an "A" class high school.

Second Agency

Now the second agency for rating high schools in the state and in all southern states of the nation is the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. The largest and best high schools of the state are members of this organization. It not only rates schools as to numbers but every few years a committee of school superintendents from other rating standing schools and members of the State Department spend days studying the school's program, its library, its activity program, the building, grounds and everything that goes to make a good high school. Its requirements are so high that many schools can't qualify. As of 1951 —121 school systems in the state were members. Carlisle has for many years met these requirements and is the only high school in the county that can offer this great organization's influence to its students upon graduation. High school graduates as well as college graduates are recognized all over the United States if they are from schools having membership in the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary schools.

Complete Statement

Due to some confusion on the part of a few parents in the city and county which has been caused by untrue rumors, the Carlisle Board of Education would like to explain why Carlisle High School still has as high a credit standing as any school in the state.

There are two crediting agencies to which high schools in Kentucky can belong if qualified. One, of course, is the State Department which sets standards for all state schools. Until recently a school which enrolled 100 students and employed not less than five teachers was called an "A" high school. Schools with not less than 60 enrolled and employed no less than three teachers were called "B". Recently there has been little stress put on whether a school was "A" or "B", but rather if it carried a program worthy of being credited and the number of students necessary to carry on such a program.

Carlisle meets all state qualifications for the highest credit rating but last year due to an enrollment in the upper four grades of a few less than 100, a rating of "AE" was given due to this one deficiency. This in no way lessened the credit standing of the high school so Carlisle is still an "A" class high school.

Farm Bureau Set Policy Meeting

Farm Bureau members in Nicholas county will have an opportunity to "talk over and decide" issues concerning agriculture, according to Charles Scheffler, county Farm Bureau president. Eight community meetings will be held on Friday night, September 11.

The county Farm Bureau Resolutions Committee will hold a series of community Policy Development (P.D.) meetings to get the thinking of the man on the farm, Scheffler said, in order that they can present these views on agricultural and local issues to the county Farm Bureau for approval. The policy can be forwarded to the state Farm Bureau in this manner.

County Farm Bureau board members agreed to act as chairmen at the community policy development meetings.

Only where seats are free do we have issues to decide, and this Farm Bureau's way of reaching a decision on agriculture issues as democratically as possible," Scheffler said, "and we hope as many Farm Bureau members as possible will attend the meetings to help Farm Bureau decide what course to chart in 1954."

Members of the Nicholas County Resolutions Committee are: Raymond House, chairman; B. C. Clark and Noble Gillispie.
