Hoppers Buried In Montana Glacier

A glacier in the Blackfoot Mountains of southern Montana carries a strange cargo in its icy bosom—hoppers of the Colorado potato beetle.

Over the last 600 years, waves of the insects attempted to migrate across the glacier. For some reason not fully explained, they failed to complete the passage of ice.

Not as the last study notes, the insects were not buried in ice, but were carried by the glacier's movement.

Approximately the geological age of the glacier is estimated to be about 10,000 years.
