Can You Identify This Mystery Farm Photograph?

MYSTERY FARM Number 26—Pictured last week was the residence of Marion Donovan which is located on the Upper Jacktown road. The farm consists of 105½ acres and has been owned by Mr. Donovan for 13 years. Mr. and Mrs. Donovan have two daughters, Faye and Carol. Early Thursday morning Mr. W. F. Gaunce informed us of the identification. Also making a correct identification were Mrs. John Shrewsbury, Mrs. Lucy Maxey, Faye Donovan and Mrs. Myrtle Mynear. A mounted photograph of farm number 26 pictured above will be given free to the owner if he will call at the office for same.

Diameter Of Planet Mars Will Seem Size Of Basketball On July 2

Astronomers around the world have begun the most complete and coordinated attack ever made on secrets of the planet Mars.

Eighteen observatories in ten countries as well as hundreds of amateur astronomers will take part in a photographic patrol that will go on around the clock, from dif erent points on the globe, until mid-September.

Swinging on their regular orbits, Mars and Earth are racing toward a passing point, or "opposition" as astronomers call it. On July 2 (correct), they will be only about 39,750,000 miles apart, closest since 1941.

At Bloemfontein, South Africa, where Mars crosses the night sky nearly overhead in this season, the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Observatory "Mars Expedition" is already at work. Using a 24-inch telescope, most powerful south of the Equator, such work, scientists are scanning the red disk of Mars and making detailed photographs of its features.

Martian Summer

What they see and what amateur astronomers everywhere can see with even a small telescope, was described by Dr. E. C. Slipher, Mars Expedition leader—bluish-green regions called "maria," caused perhaps by laying vegetation; lighter, reddish desert areas; and the bright white patches of polar cap and cloud formations.

Martian geography, or areography, as seen from the earth changes each night, for like the earth, Mars rotates. Its day—one revolution—is only slightly longer than the earth's 24 hours and 37 minutes.

During the summer in the south Martian polar cap will shrink in size with the advancing season, while the greenish areas will spread.

From time to time dust clouds can be seen, Martian sandstorms sweeping the deserts. White clouds appear and move across the planet's face. They are best seen on the "limb" or rim of the planet in regions of Martian dawn or twilight.

On a clear enough night on earth, even the mysterious straight lines or "canals" of Mars can be seen. Discovered over 75 years ago, the canals are still the subject of controversy. They have never yet been photographed. One plan this year is to try high speed cameras of short exposures to capture moments of best "seeing" and perhaps thus a picture of the thin markings.

1954 And 1956 Approaches

An International Mars Committee, organized last fall, coordinates the observations being made by cooperating institutions and scientists. Not only astronomers, but also physicists, meteorologists, biologists, and chemists are taking part in the program. Together they may find proof or disproof of actual vegetable life on Mars, as well as new knowledge of the physical makeup of the planet and its atmosphere.

This extensive study under the Mars Committee's guidance will continue through 1956, when the next near approach of Mars will bring it even closer than in 1954. Then there will not be another opportunity for such close study until 1971.

Just as a basketball, for example, seems larger to the eye the nearer it is, so the size or "apparent diameter" of Mars increases during a near approach. On July 2, Mars' apparent diameter will be 21.9 seconds of arc. This is roughly the same angle of width that a basketball would make to the naked eye at a distance of a mile and a half.
