TV NOTEBOOK

By Gene Clinkenbeard

Have you ever wondered how the word "television" originated? One school of thought maintains that Heinz Lothar Baird, reputed to be the inventor of television, fashioned the word from the Greek "tele" (I speak) and the Latin "vised" (I see).

Other learned sources object to this derivation, insisting that the "tele" part comes not from the Greek "teleo", but from the Greek "tele", meaning "far" or "distant". This is the same meaning as is written into words such at telescope and telegraph. If we buy this theory, television means, literally, "seeing from afar."

Actually, as we understand it, neither "teleo" or "vised" is a correct word. The more erudite circles claim that "teleo" doesn't exist at all, and that the latter is a misspelling of "video." Of the two afore-mentioned versions, it is our impression that the latter is correct. However, no matter how you spell it—or look at it —television is here to stay!

And the best way to look at it is on a SYLVANIA TV set. This set is as sharp as a barber's razor and clear as a baby's skin . . . so be sure and see it at GENE'S TELEVISION this week, won't you.

Farmers in Barren county harvested the biggest cane crop ever growl there for silage and cured roughage.
