An Editorial

(By Wm. T. Stray)
Experimental work in soils and other fields of Agriculture has paid great dividends during the past century in America and throughout the world. Perhaps it is not for our scientific, experimental approach to agriculture—farming in America today would be as old fashioned and unproductive as it is to many other countries.

Self-Interest Works

Self-interest works. The Christian Science Monitor has been widely reported throughout America that our farmers have been largely in the way of the progress of the country. For when one is motivated by enlightened self-interest it means that he will do what is best for himself and his neighbors.
