More Potatoes Sold As Chips

Of the total quantity of potatoes used for human consumption in this country, about 15 percent are now sold as a prepared or partially prepared food product, as compared with 2 percent in 1940. About two-thirds of these commercially processed potatoes reach the consumer in the form of potato chips.

Research has shown that consumers are willing to pay more for potato products that are prepared in such a way that they are not soggy, sticky, or greasy, and that they are free of dirt and insect infestation.
