Camping In Kentucky

Year round camping is an important part of the Boy Scouts of America's character building, citizenship training, and physical fitness program. Camping under the direction of a good leader has tremendous psychological value in the growth of a boy. With adequate supervision, he participates in a recreational program providing an escape from congested surroundings of every day life utilizing natural resources to seek adventure interest in every aspect.

In camping, he learns to depend upon himself, develops self-reliance, and acquires skills and knowledge which make him a more intelligent and resourceful citizen. He learns to take care of himself while helping others as he takes care of himself. He develops a sense of responsibility as he takes care of his camping gear and equipment. He learns to share with others and to cooperate in group activities. He learns to be a leader in his group and to be a follower in the outdoors, with the companionship of good buddies, and to be a member of a team.

Where indoor housing parties are picked their camp. Kentucky was once the camping ground for the nation's youth. It is a cross roads camp ground for American youth.

Scouts from other states and our public camp grounds and are often joined by Kentucky Scouts from the day. Scouts camp in private property, where they stayed or worked as well in their regular summer camps. In 1934, the Boy Scouts of America reported that 1,000,000 Scouts camped in Kentucky every year and during the first nine months of this year, 22,476 Scouts camped in at least 10 consecutive days and nights in several camps, according to the Unit reports to the National Council offices and summer camps.

Thousands of members camp weekends or short week camping on the numerous streams and lakes in Kentucky and traveled far away from home for adventure and recreation. The United States Poll
Democrats Would Win Control Of House If Elections Were Held Today, Survey Finds
By KENNETH FRANKLIN, Political Research Service, Princeton, New Jersey—Results of the latest survey of the late George Westley, co-author of the book, "The United States Poll," which was published last week, are as follows: If the United States House of Representatives were elected today, the Democrats would win control of the House by a margin of 100 seats, according to the survey. This is a reversal of the opinion of the late George Westley, who in 1934 predicted that the Republicans would win control of the House by a margin of 100 seats.
