Highways or Battlefields?

More Americans died on the highway in 1950 alone than on the battlefield during the entire Korean War.

The National Safety Council's statistical department shows that more than 38,000 motorists in the United States in 1950 died from automobile accidents.

Department records list the battle deaths in the Korean War at 31,629.

It is not surprising to find that the highway is as hazardous as the battlefield.

Davidson, president of the Council, "But the fact is that the loss to the nation from the 1950 traffic toll is greater in terms of human life than the loss sustained in the Korean War. Therefore, it is certainly worth getting excited about."

Can't Clip A TV Program!

Dorothy Kilgallen, the columnist and talent scout who recently had something to say about newspapers as reading material.

"You can read in a magazine or newspaper for an hour or two, or you can watch a television program for the same amount of time. You can't read a newspaper for an hour or two, or you can watch a television program for the same amount of time. You can't read a newspaper for an hour or two, or you can watch a television program for the same amount of time."
