Buy insurance in licensed firm

Frankfort, Aug. 7—A Kentucky Department of Insurance official has cautioned all Kentuckians to make certain their insurance is placed in companies authorized to do business in Kentucky.

Jack R. Wolford, deputy commissioner, specifically called attention to four companies. The Armed Forces Service Insurance Underwriters, Atlas Insurance Co., the Affiliated Underwriters and the Acme County Mutual are not licensed to operate in Kentucky, he said.

According to Wolford, the Armed Forces Service Insurance Underwriters, San Antonio, Texas, is believed to have issued policies in Kentucky. The firm does business through the Atlas Insurance Co. which the attorney general of Alabama has asked the circuit court to put in receivership — liquidate — Wolford said.

The Affiliated Underwriters, San Antonio, has issued policies in Kentucky through the Acme County Mutual Insurance Co. and has recently declared an assessment on all their policies, the official said.

State recalls Lafayette's services, visit

By Charles F. Hinds
Secretary-Treasurer,
Kentucky Historical Society

Frankfort, Aug. 7—The opening day of the Kentucky State Fair, Sept. 6, has been declared Lafayette Day by Gov. A. B. Chandler. This date represents the exact 200th birthday of the Marquis de Lafayette and is the main event in Kentucky of the Lafayette Bicentennial Year.

Every school boy knows the story of Lafayette, how as a very young man he left his native home of France and joined the Americans in their struggle for independence.

What is less generally known is Lafayette's return to the United States in 1824 and his visit to Kentucky in 1825.

He received invitations to visit Kentucky from Governor Desha, the State legislature and others. But Lafayette's itinerary first led him to states neighboring New York and then through Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama.

From Mobile, the Lafayette party traveled by steamboat to New Orleans. Saint Louis, and Nashville. After leaving Nashville on the way up the Ohio the boat hit a snag and sank. Everyone was rescued, but there were some anxious moments on the rapidly-sinking steamer when Lafayette insisted that he be the last evacuated.

The next day, the Paragon, on its way to New Orleans from Louisville, was hailed. The ship's captain was persuaded to turn back to Louisville. The Lafayette party disembarked some three miles from the old city, May 11, 1825.

The Kentucky tour led from Louisville through the following towns on the way to Cincinnati: Shelbyville, Frankfort, Versailles, Lexington, Georgetown, and Covington. From Cincinnati, the party left by boat for Pittsburgh. Maysville was a steamer stop. There on May 21, Lafayette had dinner ashore. The party left Kentucky the next day.

Matthew Jouett was commissioned by the legislature to paint Lafayette. That full-length painting is in the Old State House, Frankfort. Among other mementos of Lafayette's visit held by the Kentucky Historical Society are: The Governor Desha correspondence in the Adair-Desha-Metcalfe letter book, an itemized statement of the cost of the dinner on the State Capitol lawn for Lafayette and 700 guests, and an original copy of an invitation to the ball in Frankfort the same day.

Colonial Dames open Brown home in Capitol city

Frankfort, Aug. 7—The doors of the Orlando Brown House at Wilkinson and Wapping streets, Frankfort, are open once again to welcome visitors, as was the custom in 1835 when young Mr. Brown brought his bride, Mary Watts Brown, there to make their home.

Built for Orlando and his bride by his famous father, John Brown of Liberty Hall, one of the first two U. S. Senators from Kentucky, the house is now a museum at the request of his granddaughter, Miss Anne Hord Brown. Miss Brown willed the house and its contents in 1953 to the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America, Commonwealth of Kentucky.

The old home with its high ceilings, large fireplaces, quaint and unusual windows, depicting the Jeffersonian influence, was designed by Gideon Shryock.

The house is of early Greek Revival architecture, with the Federal influence shown in the classic entrance, its facade and the arch of the front hall.

Walls of the building are 14 inches thick and the floor are of wide and narrow oak flooring. A lovely cherry balustrade on the wide stairway leads to the second floor from the reception hall.

The double entrance door has the original "Orlando Brown" name plate and an English lock with a large key containing the initial "B" on the handle.

Other treasurers in the museum include the Duncan Phyfe tables, whale-oil lamps, candelabra and exquisite clocks brought from France by Orlando's uncle, James Brown, minister of France under President Monroe.

Family portraits painted by T. S. Mosse, T. T. Fowler, Louis Morgan and John Neagle adorn the walls. The prize of the collection is the splendid delineation of Senator John Brown by Kentucky's favorite native artist, Matthew H. Jouett.

Orlando Brown, 1801-1867, a graduate of Princeton at 19, studied medicine with his uncle, Dr. Preston W. Brown, and completed a law course at Transylvania. He was joint proprietor and editor of the Frankfort Commonwealth.

After the death of his first wife, he married Mary Cordelia Brodhead. There were four children, two of whom died in childhood.

Tractor-accidents death-total high

Here's some facts about tractor accidents that should make farm families more cautious about such vehicles' operation, says the Kentucky Agricultural Extension Service:

Tractor accidents kill about 1,100 farm persons annually, either in work or non-work activities, and on or OFF the farms; about a third of the tractor fatalities occur on highways; and about one-sixth of the tractor fatalities occur to children under 10 years of age.

'Hopper control in tobacco given

Grasshopper time is here again; hit these pests hard with insecticides to protect tobacco and forage crops, says the Kentucky Experiment Station entomology department.

Richard Thurston, entomologist, recommends the barrier treatment against grasshoppers for tobacco fields. The 'hoppers move into tobacco after their food supply in fence rows and field margins is exhausted, he says; therefore, spray these border areas first. Insecticides recommended—Aldin and Dieldrin—are contact and stomach poisons and will control 'hoppers moving toward tobacco fields.

The rates: Aldrin, one pint of the 25 percent emulsion concentrate in 5 to 15 gallons of water per acre; Aldrin dust, 2½ percent dust, 15 pounds per acre.

In forage crops, use Heptachlor, says Kenneth Starks, entomologist. The emulsion concentrate is recommended: one pint of the 25 percent emulsion concentrate in 5 to 15 gallons of water per acre generally controls the pest.

Starks stated that Aldrin and Dieldrin also can be used on the forage crops but that waiting periods are mandatory after spraying and before grazing or cutting for feed is permitted. The waiting periods: Aldrin, 21 days; Dieldrin, 30 days; and Heptachlor, seven days.

District dairy shows set

The Kentucky 4-H organization's annual district dairy shows, the fore-runner to the state fair competition, opens in August, the department said this week.

Eight shows are scheduled, starting Aug. 12 and ending Aug. 23. Approximately 1,200 cattle will be entered by state youngsters; they compete for ribbons and some $8,000 in cash prizes donated to the eight shows by the state Department of Agriculture.

Winners of top positions at the district dairy shows move on to the state fair as competitors, provided their winning animals have qualified. Both purebreds and grade animals may be shown at the district shows.

The Flemingsburg show is Aug. 22, an includes 13 counties.

Cut-up birds normally cost more per pound than whole. The higher price is due to the extra processing cost.

HINTS FOR BRIDES

Have your canning equipment on hand before the garden produce is ready and you'll avoid many worries, says Miss Elizabeth Helton, Extension specialist in foods at the University of Kentucky.

Two types of canners are necessary for basic canning (commonly called processing) the fruits or vegetables long enough to kill the organisms that cause spoilage.

For all vegetables except tomatoes, which are high in acid, the steam pressure cooker is the only reliable canner for processing. Vegetables require a temperature higher than that of boiling water, which is possible with a pressure cooker.

For tomatoes, fruits and pickled vegetables (all of which are high in acid) a boiling water bath canner may be used.

Jars and lids must be free of cracks, chips or dents if a good age is not to result. Rubber rings used must be new. Old rings lose their quality, and as they become porous, they fail to make a perfect seal.

Other needed equipment, some of which are not essential, but nevertheless helpful are: dish pan or large kettle, tea kettle, vegetable brush, sharp knife, pint or quart measure, measuring cup, long handled spoon, jar funnel, tongs for lifting jars, clean cloths, hot pan holders and labels for marking jars.

"Musts" for Successful Canning

1. Vegetables must be fresh, young and tender.

2. Sort them immediately after gathering.

3. Can them immediately after sorting.

4. Process according to timetable; do not overcook under process.

5. Use the raw or hot pack method, but follow directions.

6. Complete seals at once as jars are taken from the canner unless self-sealing jars are used. If liquid boiled out of jar, do not reopen to add more.

7. Cool jars top side up with air spaces between. Test seal before storing.

FOR KENTUCKY FOLKS
by Wm. C. Johnstone
AGRICULTURAL REPRESENTATIVE
KENTUCKY BANKERS ASSOCIATION

AUGUST—1957

Changes. A few days ago I was on Radio Station WHAS helping celebrate it's thirty-fifth anniversary. Incidentally, it is almost 35 years since I drove my first T-Model Ford over gravel roads and through two toll gates to get from Lexington to Campbellsville to begin my work there as county agent.

In reviewing the major changes affecting Kentucky's agriculture that have taken place during that period, the following seemed to be the six most important: (1) The displacement of man power and horse power by mechanical power; (2) The coming of electricity to the farm, thereby replacing kerosene lamps, hot kitchen ranges and out-door toilets; (3) The introduction of hybrid corn and new crop varieties, including Korean lespedeza and Ky. 31 Fescue; (4) The discovery of new chemicals to control insects, diseases and weeds; (5) Adoption of new techniques in livestock production, especially in poultry and turkey production, and including artificial insemination of dairy cattle and the use of new breeds; and (6) The change in the farmers' attitudes towards the conservation and improvement of our soil.

These changes have been largely responsible for the great increases in crop yields—for instance, the per acre yield of corn in Kentucky increased about 70 percent. Among other things they have made it possible for more and its people as up-to-date as those of the city and have enabled the farmer to get for a much large amount of capital and credit by the farmer.

But the greatest change of all has been in the farmer himself. Thirty-five years ago the average farmer was slow to take up new ideas; he was suspicious of county agents and book-learning; today, he is not only receptive to new ideas but he is right on the heels of research workers for something new.

The race for efficiency on the farm is fast. The farmer of the future must be well educated and wise, and well-beeled with cash and credit because progress will continue, probably at a faster rate, during the next generation and only those with tremendous ability will be able to survive the competition.
