From—An editor's random thoughts

Awake early, despite the fact that it is the Sabbath and I might lie shed, but such is human nature, what when one will one can't and when one can't one would. Which thought the venerable Samuel Johnson, I think it was, set down in his writings. "When I was young," said he, "and had no penny, I did most eagerly crave sugar plums, but growing old and possessing the penny I find that I have lost my taste for the sweetmeat." Which it seems to me is a warrant somewhat for the goings on of the young these days, over which we of another generation do mirack and hold up our hands in amaze, forgetting that if our past were "an open book," it might be denied the privileges of the mails. For each generation is much alike and the youngsters do but snatch at life which smiles and tempts them mightily to enjoy.

So lay awhile musing, and the morn very still and hot after the rains. And right sadly I miss the twitter of my purple martins, who left their cozy home so unexpectedly that I failed to observe their preparations for journeying as I had intended . . . And I listen to the silence, if that may be, for it seems to me that there is a stillness, a hush about mid-August that is well nigh sound. Almost one may hear the soft breathing of Nature, resting fecundity. Quietly, soothingly she mothers her children under the sun, swelling in the moist earth. And throughout the still nights the little winged musicians of the grass and leaves fiddle a crooning lullaby to these lusty infants of the Universal Mother, growing under the golden sunlight of peaceful afternoons, making ready for the Harvest.

"People," wrote Burke will not look forward to posterity who never look backward to their ancestors."

I wonder if that hardy little band of intrepid woodsmen pursuing with such matchless, even if unwise audacity, the wily foe that loitered in retreat from Bryant's Station one hundred and forty-five years ago, gave a thought to posterity; pictured for a moment the beauties of a sovereign Commonwealth to be enjoyed in peace by their remote descendants. Doubtless, after the manner of all flesh, they were concered chiefly with the present, though not, one is sure, to the extent of this practical present day generation that, is prone to look neither before nor after and to pine only for what will pass as legal tender.

But, however that may be, these hardy woodsmen who had braved the terrors of the Wilderness Trail; who had clung to their lone-ly outposts with the tenacity of the pioneer, bullied better than they know, perhaps, and in an audacious struggle against cruelty and cruel foe, a struggle reaching its bloody high-tide at the Battle of the Blue Licks, this little advance guard of Anglo-Saxon civilization won for their descendants all that's Kentucky.

And so it is well, I think, that each year Kentuckians show by gathering at the site of the battle—even if but to picnic and renew old acquaintance—that we have not ceased to "look backward to our ancestors" whose hardihood won for their descendants a pleasant land, a mightly Commonwealth.

THE WORLD'S MOST WIDELY USED DEVOTIONAL GUIDE

THURSDAY, AUGUST 15

Read John 12:23-32.

Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth. (John 12:25.)

David, our little three-year-old son, suffered for nine months with leukemia. When my husband and I were told that our only child would soon die, our first thought was "No! this cannot be true." But as the months went by, we knew that it was true. We prayed earnestly for strength to carry us through that trying time.

Then one day in May, just as the morning light was breaking, he left us to go to his heavenly Father. Our son had learned to love Him so much during his short life.

After my husband and I had prayed by our son's bed, we went out on our back porch. As we watched the sun come up, I thought how wonderful of God to give us the morning so that we can leave behind us the darkness of the night. As surely as night falls, God gives us a new day to walk in the light.

PRAYER

Our heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the gift of eternal life. It gives us hope that one day we may enter into that land of eternal light, where there shall be no night. In the name of Christ, the Light of the world. Amen.

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY

"The morning light is breaking.
The darkness disippears."

BLUEGILLS AND CUCUMBER SAUCE

Thumbing through a file of old recipes we came across a cucumber sauce that was labeled "for fish" and having a batch of bluegills at hand we tried it . . . and found it excellent!

The bluegills were placed in a heavily buttered shallow pan and baked for 20 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees). They then were laid on warm plates, covered with the cucumber sauce and served.

For the sauce, peel and chop 1 medium cucumber and place in a sieve to drain while you prepare the other ingredients. Whip ½ cup whipping cream until it is thick (but not whipped), gradually add 1½ tablespoons vinegar, ¼ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon paprika. Then mix in the drained cucumber.

POULE DE SOIS SAUTEED

August and September bring to the scene a fine mushroom known as the "Hen of the Woods" (or poule de bois in French) and if, upon finding one, you treat it right by not taking the entire plant, you can have several cuttings before it becomes old and, tough. Like the mother chicken from which it was named, the Hen of the Woods becomes a leathery individual as time takes its toll and should not be used in this condition. Take only young plants. "Hens" grow on logs and stumps.

Where some mushrooms are so delicate they must be carefully handled and cooked, the Hen is of a sturdy nature. Soak it in salt water (1 tablespoon per quart) 30 minutes, then cut into small pieces and cook until tender in plain water.

For each cup of mushrooms to be sauteed, melt 1 tablespoon butter in frying pan and add ½ teaspoon garlic salt. Put mushrooms in pan, cover and simmer several minutes. Serve over ground beef patties.

WALLEYES WITH SPANISH SAUCE

An excellent accompaniment for walleye fillets which have been fried to a gold-brown in hot fat is this Spanish sauce. And remember, keep the temperature of the fat while the fish is frying. When the temperature drops, as is likely whenever a considerable quantity of fillets are dropped in, the resulting product is greasy. Fillets should fry 3 to 6 minutes at a temperature of 370 degrees.

The Spanish sauce is best made several hours ahead, so that it has sufficient time to chill. In a saucer pan mix 1½ cups canned tomatoes, ½ small onion chopped fine, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper, ¼ teaspoon celery salt, ½ small bay leaf, 3 cloves and 1 tablespoon taragon vinegar.

Simmer 12 minutes, put through a sieve, then stir in 2 egg yolks into which 3 tablespoons olive oil have been beaten. Cook a double boiler 5 minutes, stirring constantly, and finally add 1 tablespoon gelatin dissolved in 3 or 4 teaspoons water. Strain into bowl and chill.

(Send your favorite fish or game recipe to The Hungry Sportsman in care of this paper. We'll send you a life-membership card in the "Wildlife Pantry" club, and if your recipe is used, you'll receive a 40 recipe fish and game cookbook.)

KENTUCKIANS in WASHINGTON

By Gil Kingsbury

FOOTBALL?:

It doesn't seem right to be talking about football with the mercury up in the 90's But the Washington Redskins, the pro outfit, have given Kentuckians here cause for rejoicing.

Two former University of Kentucky Wildcats will be in Redskin uniform this year. Steve Meilinger, the end, quarterback, halfback and whatnot, will be back for his second year. And J. T. Frankenberger, the star Big Blue tackle, will be putting in his first appearance in the big time.

THAT AMBASSADOR:

The Senate, the other day, approved Maxwell Gluck as our ambassador to Ceylon.

However, before he got an okay, there was considerable discussion about his status as a citizen of Kentucky. Seems as though the new ambassador claimed the Blue Grass State as his home although he spends most of his time in New York.

It developed that Ambassador Gluck, is contributor to the Republican party, owns a horse farm in the Blue Grass, hence his claim to citizenship in the land of burley and bourbon.

A Covington school executive made Washington news the other day.

Miss Sara Rives of the Covington school system presided at a convention of Delta Kappa Gamma and decreed that members must not wear hats during meetings. A Washington picture showed her removing a hat from the head of a delegate.

It was all in fun, of course. The sorority, of which Miss Rives is a regional director, discussed school problems.

Members include only those who have made outstanding contributions in the field of education.

BUSY, BUSY:

Still as busy as ever is Kentucky's former Senator Earle C. Clements, now the director of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee.

We dropped in for a visit and found him conferring, in rapid succession, with Senator Eastland of Mississippi, Senator Morse of Oregon, Senator Jackson of Washington, and Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson of Texas. And on his appointment list is a delegation from California to talk about the forthcoming senatorial race out there, as well as a delegation from Wisconsin to confer on politics in that state.

JOHNSON LETTER

June 29-30

Before we left Yellowstone we stopped at Sylvan Lake to give the boys one more chance to fish for trout. Their luck had been very poor on previous occasions but this time in quick succession they had six beautiful brown and rainbow trout ranging from 10 to 14 inches. Nothing tastes better than trout fried in butter and eaten around a big bonfire! Inspired by the success of the fishing we paused at Sylvan Pass to take one last picture of the family cavorting on the snow. David climbed to the top of a steep snow filled crevass and as he was descending his feet slipped and down he rolled the seat of his pants his telegram.

The drive from the east entrance of Yellowstone to Cody, Wyoming is one of the most beautiful in the world. The fantastic rock formations of the Shoshone Canyon and the winding tunnel road near Buffalo Bill Dam is breath taking.

We stayed in a motel in Cody in order to see a rodeo and left the next morning to cross the Big Horn Mountains over Powder River Pass. Here again we were spellbound by the beautiful mountain flowers that carpeted the area—lupine and larkspurs of blue, white, cinquefoil, yellow daises and cactus flowers the reds of Indian paintbrush and many others.

We camped that night at the foot of Devil's Tower in Wyoming. It was a small camp with about 18 campsites but the ranger's program was most interesting and we all felt like one big family. At the base of the tower was a prairie dog town with hundreds of these cute little animals. With patience they could be coaxed into eating from your hand and all the tourists were eagerly taking pictures of them.
