Health column

Have you taken your dog to the veterinarian for his immunization? Most of Kentucky's canine population received the three-year chick embryo in 1954 when the compulsory rabies immunization law went into effect. These dogs are required by law to be vaccinated again this year. Pups six months old are ready for their first vaccination, and dogs which received one-year vaccine last year also need to be immunized.

In addition to fulfilling the law you may be saving your child undue sadness over the loss of his dog from rabies. By preventing the possibility of your dog developing rabies and attacking your child or your neighbor, you may even save a life.

Despite the fact that rabies vaccination is required by law, Kentucky still has a high rate, according to R. L. Hecterne, D.V.M., Director of the Division of Veterinary Public Health, Kentucky State Department of Health. This is due in part to rabies in wild and stray animals which, of course, cannot be immunized and must be controlled by extermination.

The saliva of an infected animal carries the virus which causes rabies in humans. When the rabid animal attacks, the virus may get into wounds or scratches.

If you suspect rabies in an animal, lock it in a pen or see your local veterinarian. Positive symptoms will indicate rabies within ten days. If laboratory analysis is necessary, do not destroy the head in killing the animal. Your veterinarian or the Nicholas County Health Department will instruct you on how to prepare and ship the head of the suspected rabid animal for tests at the Kentucky State Department of Health Laboratories in Louisville or Lexington.

A pamphlet available from the Nicholas County Health Department notes that an individual who is exposed to rabies should see his family physician immediately to determine if anti-rabies treatment is necessary.

But rabies can be prevented, and Kentucky can lose its high rate of rabies. It's up to you.

Marketing Quota Penalty Rates Set For Excess Wheat

A marketing quota penalty rate of $1.12 per bushel on "excess" wheat of the 1957 crop was announced today by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

As directed by law, the rate of marketing quota penalty is 45 percent of the parity price per bushel of wheat as of May 1 of the calendar year in which the crop is harvested. The current parity price for wheat is $2.50 per bushel.

Growers voted approval of marketing quotas are in effect, marketing quotas for the 1957 wheat crop on July 20, 1956. When wheat marketing quotas are in effect, a farmer who does not comply with the wheat acreage allotment established for his farm and who harvests more than 15 acres of wheat is subject to a penalty on his farm marketing excess. The wheat crop from such a farm is also ineligible for price support.

The national average price support for the 1957 wheat crop was announced on July 2, 1956, at $2 per bushel.

COMMENT

June 6, 7, 8—we spent at Kenlake attending the 8th mid-summer meeting of the Kentucky Press Association. Besides business meetings, committee reports and panel discussions there was plenty of time for recreation. Needless to say we took advantage of every moment to enjoy beautiful Kentucky Lake —which has a shoreline of 2,200 miles and is 185 miles long. We were lucky in that the weather was perfect and we took advantage of nearly every facility for recreation including swimming, boating, horse back riding, walking through the beautiful country and last but not least was the fishing. I am sure it must be a "fisherman's paradise" but it was not our lucky day for fishing.

As we left Kenlake our parting remark was that we wished it was not so far away.—K.T.F.
