The Man With The Badge

On November 18, 1950, a West Virginia Conservation Officer, E. S. Anderson, shot and killed Clyde J. Tennant for resisting arrest when caught spotlighting for deer. Anderson was subsequently charged with murder. The officer was an old timer in the business, 67 years old, and with a reputation for good judgment. Anderson reclaimed Tennant threatened to shoot him and he did not fire until Tennant raised his gun and took aim.

Anderson was in the locality looking for Tennant at the request of the owner of the land upon which the shooting occured.

Anderson had to stand the cost of his own defense, but conservationist rallied to raise part of the expense money. I would surmise that Anderson's life has been a living hell since the day of the shooting, which happened because an old and faithful servant of the people stood up to defend law and order.

Naturally stories were circulated to prejudice public opinion, common in cases of this kind. Just a little illegal game for a life. Supposing the officer had lost his life for just a little illegal game?

The basic difference to be considered is the officer represented all the concepts of law and order around which government have developed, while the game violater represented lawlessness and a contempt for human life. His greed was paramount to public interest.

Anderson was recently found not guilty by jury trial.

Anderson is not the first warden that has had to defend himself with fire arms and in court; and over the years a sizable list of wardens has been killed because they were not fast enough on the draw.

This case should bring sober reflection to many people conservationist that some aspects of resource—management are still a deadly game.

Administrators have the job of guiding good men and building public support for them, and wardens on the job could help their case by some analysis.

Pinning a badge on a man does something to him; his natal outlook has to adjust to the responsibility and authority vested in him. The authority to restrict the liberty of fellow citizens should not be taken lightly nor should it be abused. The adjustment will determine a mans ability, self-restraint, judgment and courage. A badge can expose sadistic qualities formerly unknown or concealed.

A successful law man must be endowed with certain basic characteristics. Among the most important are judgment and decision; a split-second to follow through, and in emergencies to be able to shoot the works with out decisiveness thought of personal safety. Whereas, one's rookie can be ruined by a situation of sudden violence, in another nit may spark latent qualities and greatness and leadership. A successful game warden by nature is an individualist. He enjoys being his own boss working out his own problems and the competition of matching wits with offenders of the law. He is not just a woods cop, although he may be a crafty man hunter, with the sleuthing ability of a city detective as well as a master Craftsman in the woods.

He must know the laws he enforces from A to Izzard and be something of a trial lawyer.

In this present day of automobiles and radio, he is beginning to lose affinity with nature; with the woods, fields and waters. He hikes less, rides more and does not put forth the physical effort of his predecessors and seldom carries a pack or sleeps in the brush.

Too few wardens ever reach full potential in their own field or the broader field of conservation. They fail through lack of hard work and diligence to master all the many ramifications of the work so necessary for success. This is equally true with other specialties. When a warden allows the job to become routine, he is either slipping or lacks imagination. There is no place for routine in game law enforcement. In addition to knowing all the tricks of the trade in enforcement, the warden should be well-grounded in the biological field of fish and game, and have a working knowledge of forestry and land management. All these specialties develop him into the overall field man that he should be. By virtue of these additional attributes he will be less of a cop and more of a conservationist, less sadistic and better balanced in humility and humor.

Above all, he must have an interest in people. He works in fanatically conscientious, indifferent hour, physical discomforts, poor pay and public abuse. Many are called some are chosen but too few really succeed. There is no better job in the entire field of Conservation upon which to build decision and judgment for all specialties that entail basic training in law enforcement. — Earnest Swift

HERE'S HOW . . .

MAKE A PATIO PLANTER BOX

Large ornamentals require a plant box with adequate growing space. Placed on a patio, the boxes—and you will want one—are attractive structure decorations. Use only durable or treated wood. Use a miter box when sawing the squared ends as well as for the mitered joints to assure a proper fit.

Make the base 18 inches square. Use 2 by 4-inch lumber. Assemble with glue and 10-penny finishing nails. Use 2 by 6-inch lumber for the bottom. Edge-glue the boards to form a square. Fasten to the base, leaving a 2-inch overhang on all sides. Bore 1-inch holes in the bottom for drainage. Make the top inside frame as shown. Cut the sides from 1 by 6-inch lumber and attach with glue and 6-penny finishing nails. Attach the moulding with 4-penny finishing nails. The leg is made of 1 by 4-inch lumber. Make mitered joints and assemble with glue and 10-penny finishing nails. Fasten the top to the box with glue and 6-penny finishing nails. Round the corners to match those of the box. Set all nails.

Paint or stain and varnish.
