Strawberry growers to meet Monday night

A meeting for commercial strawberry growers will be held Monday, April 1, at 7:30 p.m. at the court house, County Agent Owen W. T. Straw has announced. Arrangements will be made for estimating and ordering members of crates and baskets needed by individual producers.

Strawberry Plants

Old producers of strawberries as well as any new producers who are interested in setting out additional strawberry acreage are urged to attend this meeting and order strawberry plants. New strawberry acreage should be planted as early in April as possible.

The strawberry harvest season, due to the late spring, is expected to begin about May 25 and extend through the first two weeks of June. This means that the strawberry harvest will be about two weeks later than normal and should develop much the same as it did last year. Nicholas County will have about 20 acres of commercial strawberries in production this year, which is about double the acreage harvested last year.

Marketed At Morehead

Arrangements were made at a recent Strawberry Growers meeting to combine the truck ing of berries with Bourbon county. Berries will be delivered to the Morehead market and sold cooperatively through the Strawberry Association there.

A Processing Plant for extra ripe strawberries is also available at Morehead and the Processing Plant strawberries are prepared for quick freezing, where berries are later sold to food processors, such as Ice Cream Manufacturers, and other outlets using frozen strawberries.

The public is cordially invited to attend this meeting, and anyone wishing to learn more about strawberry production will be welcome.

Red Cross report given Tuesday

So far the Dorseyville District is the only one that has reported in the campaign. We have partial reports from Arnold Heights, Western section of the city, Parks, East Union and Myers. These workers give a report of a total of a little over $400 collected, the Rev. W. R. Haborn said. We are confident that each worker see each person in his district and give each person the opportunity to take part in this great humanitarian effort. If he report a contribution as they have stated, we will have a marked quota for the total giving to Red Cross. The Chairman of the Drive, Mrs. Lovell Hollar, asks that the workers get their reports in by this Saturday, if at all possible.

Effie Anderson teaching 38th year in County schools

Length of time of teaching is not the important factor in her tenure as a teacher; it has been her patient understanding and untiring efforts that have produced the real fruits of her teaching career. Those that have attended her classes know that she expects work and achievement but that her demands are always reasonable and in proportion to the ability of the child.

Miss Effie enrolled 26 pupils in her classes at the beginning of this year which is perhaps the smallest number of pupils during any year of her experience. Besides teaching her classes, she does the duties of the Principal and supervises the lunch program both of which she has done well. Her School has had the highest attendance in the School Milk program in Nicholas County and has been a challenge to all other schools in Kentucky.

Besides her teaching experiences in the elementary schools, Miss Effie has taught in the high schools at Moorefield and Taylor's Creek.

Part of her summer vacations have been used for teaching exceptional children who either wanted to accelerate their education or other children who wanted to catch up or stay with their class. Other summers, Miss Effie has attended school to further her own training and to learn new methods.

Sense of Humor

Many things could be said about her personal qualities, however, most of them are known to all of Nicholas County. Probably the one personal quality that has contributed more to her success than any other is her sense of humor. Not only has her sense of humor contributed to her pleasing personality, but it has always given her pupils the assurance that life is worthwhile and can be pleasant even at work.

Enchantment of Polar Regions romantic theme of Byrd's Career

A golden thread of story-book adventure ran through the life and career of the late Rear Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd.

In imaginative words, the Admiral himself once expressed the thought in an article written for the National Geographic Society, which contributed substantially to his nearly explorations work through financial grants, maps, and other geographic research.

But the Admiral's association with the Society went back beyond his assaults on the Far South to the time when the Arctic's icy wastes challenged adventurers of the earth's mysteries. And in this story, too, lies an element of romantic success over formidable odds.

Wings Won in North

During his undergraduate days at the Naval Academy, young Byrd had injured his foot and ankle in football and gymnasium accidents. Several years of subsequent treatment for ankle proved too weak to withstand battleship routine. he was retired by a medical board.

The outbreak of World War I brought opportunity to show his restored physical fitness, followed by a return to active duty for various assignments. Finally, through the National Geographic Society, came Byrd's chance to woo the mysteries of the frozen north, and launch a career that from then on was to be centered on polar exploration.

In 1925 the Society, with the cooperation of the Navy, sent out an expedition for scientific study and exploration of the vast area north of the Beaufort Sea. The party was led by Commander Donald B. MacMillan, and, at the Society's request, included the then Commander Byrd, as head of the Naval contingent of three airplanes and eight men.

As Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, Society Board Chairman, afterward remarked, "Byrd's flying over Ellesmere Island, North Greenland, and adjacent areas—mapping thousands of miles of new territory—enabled scientists to gather new Arctic data, and gave Byrd his polar wings."

Later Byrd became the first man to fly over the North and South Poles. Following the lure of the Antarctic, he made his first southern expedition the most completely equipped and manned that had yet been seen.

Its carefully planned and diverse operations made use of the greatest variety of technical aids available—scientific apparatus, airplanes, radio, and aerial cameras. And as world interest grew in the South Polar regions, each successive party that Admiral Byrd took out for his government became larger and more complex.

Operation Deepfreeze, supporting the allout effort to gather scientific knowledge on Antarctica for the International Geophysical Year, is using thousands of men, a dozen ships and scores of aircraft.

In his long and often dangerous work in the Icelands, Admiral Byrd piled up a series of adventures, interwoven with harrowing experiences, that is equalled only by the hundreds of honors bestowed on him.

His greatest ordeal was probably the five black months of 1934 that he spent alone, gathering weather observations, in a hut more than 100 miles from his Little America base. Stricken ill by poisonous fumes from stove and generator, he barely survived until rescue came.

Between explorations and tours of duty, an avalanche of awards and citations poured down upon Admiral Byrd—from colleges, universities, and geographic organizations, from his own and foreign governments. Among them were the Congressional Medal of Honor, the Medal of Freedom, the Navy Cross, Flying Cross, the Distinguished Service Medal. In 1953, the Board of Trustees of the National Geographic Society elected him a Life Trustee.

Back in 1926, in recognition of his North Polar flight, President Coolidge had presented Byrd with the National Geographic Society's highest honor, the Hubbard Medal. Four years later, the award was the Society's Special Medal of Honor presented by President Hoover for contributions to knowledge of the Antarctic and the flight over the South Pole.

But whatever the honors and accolades that came his way, Admiral Byrd's prime concern to the last was the conquest of the polar areas. In a Geographic article published as recently as August, 1956, he remarked on the great progress that had been made in assembling weapons to carry on the assault.

"To a man who has devoted thirty years of his life to exploring the polar regions preaching the importance of Antarctica," he said, "the enormous satisfaction to see this job at last ... of the tools it needs."

March 31 sales tribute to for '56 payments

Producers must complete the marketing of either wool or lambs'nst later than March 31 for payment eligibility under the 1956 program, Chairman H. F. Vice of the Nicholas County Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee reminds farmers.

He explained that, under wool program regulations, "completion of marketing" means that the title of wool or lambs must have passed from the seller to the buyer. If there is any detail of the sale, such as weighing or results of ewes testing for shrinkage, which is not settled until after March 31, the sale will not be considered a transaction during the 1956 marketing year, which runs from April 1, 1956 through March 31, 1957. This means that wool must be actually delivered or transferred through documents. This can be accomplished only after all the factors needed to determine the net sales proceeds, such as price per pound, weight, and yield, are known.

Payments under the 1956 program will be made this summer when the payment rates are determined on the basis of average prices received for wool sold during the 1956 marketing year. Any marketings after March 31 will be eligible for 1957 program payments to be made in the summer of 1958.
