Teen Town

By Ted Ineko Jr.

Everyone may think the Youth Center, or Teen Town, has fallen through. Due to the school, trips of both schools, there hasn't been much said about Teen Town for some time. Now that we are all back, we are going to try and get the Center open very soon.

The council had a short meeting at Teen Town, Monday night. There we found the Center looking very nice. The walls were all painted and the floor was sanded. Those that are interested in the Center are invited to stop and see the center any time they wish. The men around town have been working hard, and the Center does look nice.

The membership cards have been printed. They will be given to the ones who have paid their dues after the meeting of the council Thursday, May 16. If you are interested in joining the Center see one of the members of the Student Council.

Tuesday night some of the council went down and helped scrub the booths. Also some of the touch up work was done. This may seem to some like hard work but when we do something that will benefit us later it can be made into a lot of fun. Those in the community that think this Youth Center will fall through ought to come down and see some of the kids work. After seeing them for a while I believe your views will be changed.

MAN ON THE STREET

WHAT MAKES A GOOD FAMILY DOCTOR? PUBLIC TELLS WHAT IT LIKES BEST ABOUT THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By Kenneth Fink, Director
Princeton Research Service

Today's question was suggested by Dr. Benedict B. Scanserra, a Princeton, N. J. family doctor and a member of the New Jersey chapter of the American Academy of General Practice.

The A.A.G.P. is the nation's second largest medical association and currently has more than 22,000 family doctors (general practitioners) in its membership.

To keep his membership in the Academy, each family doctor is required to spend at least 50 hours a year in the formal study of medical subjects.

Princeton, New Jersey—What do rank and file American citizens like best about their family doctor?

To determine the answers to this all important question, MAN ON THE STREET and his people asked people in all walks of life who said they had a family doctor:

"What things do you like best about your family doctor?"

Results of the survey show that three things are uppermost on the minds of people when they think about what they like about their family doctor:

1. Have confidence in him: have faith in him; full faith in him; have confidence in his ability trust him; believe in him.
2. Be a good doctor: he's well qualified; he's competent; he's capable; knows what he's doing; knows his business; just a good doctor.
3. He takes a personal interest in us: the interest he takes in the family; he takes an interest more than one out of every two in the survey who mentioned something that he liked about his family doctor named one of the above three.

Other things liked best about the family doctor, judging by the number of mentions, are:

4. He tells you the truth; gives you honest answers; he's frank.
5. He comes when you call him always available; comes no matter what time you call; he's always there when you need him.
6. He takes time with you takes time to listen; takes time to examine you; never in a hurry.
7. He knows the family history knows you, knows the family; knows all about us.
8. He's friendly like an old friend; friendly attitude.
9. He made me well, did a good job on my boy; got me back to work; keeps family well.
10. He's dependable he's reliable; you can depend on him.

Also receiving considerable mention were the following:

11. He's thorough he gets to the bottom of things.
12. He's considerate and sympathetic: he's thoughtful.
13. He explains things to you the way he explains things.
14. His attitude: his manner; has a good attitude.
15. His understanding.
16. His sincerity: he's sincere.
17. He's a gentleman: he talks nice; he's not abrupt.

Receiving fewer mentions are that he's patient; he's up to date; he doesn't treat you as though you don't know anything; he's no alarmist; his fees are not enormous; he's kind; he takes extra courses; he doesn't give medicine unless you need it; he's more than just a doctor, and he doesn't make any unnecessary visits.

The Carlisle Mercury presents the reports of MAN ON THE STREET exclusively in this area.

The service is operated and distributed by Princeton Research Service.

Cicadas due in state again

The periodical cicada—sometimes erroneously called the 17-year locust—will appear in Kentucky this year, says W. A. Price, Kentucky State entomologist.

Price said adults of these insects, noted for their long nymphal period (from 13 to 17 years depending on the climate) will appear about the end of May. They will be on hand about six weeks.

Principal damage done by the cicada, Price pointed out, is not through their feeding habits but their system of laying eggs. Using their saw-like ovipositors, the female cicadas cut into stems or twigs on shrubbery and trees and deposit their eggs in the cuts, this cutting weakens the branchends and eventually they die.

However, even in the "nymphal" stage, the insects living underground do considerable damage. They suck the sap from tree roots.

Price noted the cicadas won't attack trunks or large limbs on big trees. They confine themselves to small branches on the extreme edge of the big trees, or use smaller, younger trees for their egg-laying activities. Smaller trees easily can be ruined by the insects' pruning operation, though larger trees usually will recover.

He recommends protecting small trees and shrubs by wrapping with cheesecloth or similar material during the egg-laying period. This period, extends from about a week after emergence of the cicadas until the insects disappear.

Small trees adjacent to wood lots will be special objects for attack, Price added.

Several spray applications made at night or early in the morning have given good control of the adult cicadas. The material recommended is commonly known as TEEP, used at the rate of ¼ to ½ pint of 40 percent material in 100 gallons of water. Since TEPP is a poisonous material, all precautions recommended by the manufacturer concerning its use and handling should be strictly observed.

The cicadas do take from 13 to 17 years in a mature immature into the adult. The reason they appear at more frequent intervals is because there are numerous broods of cicadas which do not reemerge in the same year. Brood XIV is the one coming this year.

Records of the 1957 brood show that it will be found all over the state, adjacent states probably will not be as heavily infested, surveys show.

White lawn grubs hit residence grass plots

White lawn grubs, an insect pest that can feed on lawn roots to such an extent that the lawn sometimes can be rolled back just like a carpet, should be controlled now.

Richard Thurston, UK Agricultural Experiment Station entomologist, says the grubs feed close to the grass surface—which makes it easier to control them. They are about an inch below the surface.

Four materials will control grubs, plus other soil insects such as wire-worms and ants which are annoying or damaging. The materials are Heptachlor, Aldrin, Chlordane and Dieldrin.

Granular insecticides (which look like fertilizer) are recommended. Granulars penetrate the grass to the grubs, and pose less of a residual problem to children or pets who might come in contact with it.

The rates per 1,000 square feet: Aldrin and Heptachlor, 2½ pounds of a 5 percent granular or dust: Dieldrin, 1.25 pounds; and Chlordane, 5 pounds.

Don't put the dust or granulars on when the ground is wet. For safety's sake, (especially with the dust) sprinkle the treated area with a gardon hose to get the dust down into the soil. This will reduce the possibility of harm to animals or small children.

Recipe of the week

The family that has an asparagus bed in the garden is both thrifty and forward looking. This delicate flavored vegetable may be a source of added cash income, and it definitely is a treat during the spring season. It may be served with melted butter, cream, cheese sauce, cream sauce, mushroom soup sauce, or as a vegetable pudding.

Miss Elizabeth Helton, Extension specialist in foods at the University of Kentucky, says the following recipe is a close cousin to the one for popular corn pudding.

Asparagus Pudding

2 c cut-up asparagus
3 eggs
2 c milk
1½ t salt
Dash pepper
2 T melted butter

Wash asparagus carefully, removing the scales with point of knife. Cook in boiling salted water until tender, but do not overcook. Drain. Scald milk. Beat eggs slightly, add scalded milk, seasonings, melted butter and asparagus. Pour mixture in well-buttered 1½-quart casserole set in a pan of hot water. Bake in 350-degree oven until custard sets, about 40 to 50 minutes, or until inserted knife comes out clean.

Menu: Roast leg of lamb with mint jelly, parsley buttered carrots, asparagus pudding, lettuce wedges with French dressing, rolls, butter and rhubarb pie.

COMMENT

I think I mentioned the Book and Author Dinner last week. It was an impressive affair. Edward Weeks, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, was master of ceremonies. The speakers were the authors and each one of course also gave a brief review of their latest book. They were Catherine Drinker Bowen, B. J. Chute, S. J. Perelman, Philip Wylie and last but not least—Charles Van Doren. He spoke on his experience on TV and also mentioned his book just out, "Lincoln's Commands." After the meeting we met Mrs. Van Doren.

No visit to Richmond is complete without a trip down Monument Avenue. Some of Richmond's first large mansions can still be seen here as elegant as they were a century ago. Monument Avenue has just what its name implies—monuments. Pictures of the monuments along the thoroughfare have been printed in almost every magazine, newspaper, and other types of publications in the United States. They have been used in movies and in television.

Probably the outstanding monument is the one in honor of Robert E. Lee unveiled in 1890. The huge figure of Lee, astride his horse "Traveler." Only the three-lettered inscription, "Lee" has been chiseled into a towering concrete base on which the huge monument rests. To mention a few of the others there is one of Jefferson Davis, James Ewell Brown (Jeb) Stuart, Thomas J. "Stonewall" Jackson, and many, many, more.

One day I was invited by the motion picture censor board in the State Office Bldg. to see two movies being shown before release in Virginia. On some days the board will see as many as four movies. That is a job to look into if you want to see movies everyday.—K.T.F.
