HOMEMAKERS HEAR SAFETY TALK
Slate Trooper, N. R. Gunnell, explained state traffic laws and regulations to the group of homemakers that met Monday in the Carlisle Baptist Church.
Speeding is the No. 1 killer on our highway, today. Thousands of people are injured, and millions of dollars property damage are due to accidents on the state highways.
The age group under 25 years are envolved in 15% of all the accidents, and this group represents 25% of all fatal accidents.
In the point system, said Trooper Gunnell, a traffic violator will receive 4 points for passing a school bus; 4 points for reckless driving; 4 points for any violation that causes an accident; and 3 points for speeding. When an individual has accumulated 6-9 points against his license he receives a warning letter; if 9-12 points have accumulated he may be called in to appear before the judge; if the total is 12 or more points the individual's license may be revoked.
The maturity which is ementiat for the responsibility of driving an automobile is not a trait that can be taught directly. Driving classes in high schools are doing much to help youngsters to develop the skills necessary for driving. These classes usually include the concept of social responsibility as a part of the course. Social and emotional maturity cannot be developed overnight, but these characteristics are the result of many influences over a large period of years.
Trooper Gunnell says, the parents attitude toward the traffic laws are the foundation upon which the child's attitudes and concepts are based. The youngster will copy the parents driving habits, driving attitudes as well as attitudes in other social situations.
You cannot expect your son to be a law abiding driver if he hears you fuming behind every stop light and sees you disregard traffic rules and courtesies.
If parents set a good example in driving and in general social conduct, the children's growing up will be a gradual process, and you will be able to let them take the car with the assurance, that your example will be with him to act as an effective guide.

COMMENT

When I read the following thought of our own Main street. If you haven't seen and felt this, just be in town about ten minutes after three.

Shower of Children
by Catharine Thaxter

In mid-afternoon the school house
Like overladen rain clouds
Opens their doors, and children Pour forth in a precipitation of color and sound.
In cloudburst fury they besiege
the stillness.
And the city quickens to the storm of their passing.
They drip from fences, flood store doorways.
And overflow the sidewalks
To run in rainbow streams along the streets.
Then as the earth blots water
They are absorbed by the houses.
Leaving only the stragglers.
A scattering here and there
Like the last few drops
Of a passing shower.
