Water-soaked soil causing trouble in alfalfa stands

Excessive rainfall in Kentucky, making soils in some areas water-soaked, probably is the reason many alfalfa stands have a generally unhealthy appearance, being stunted, yellowed and with much leaf-loss.

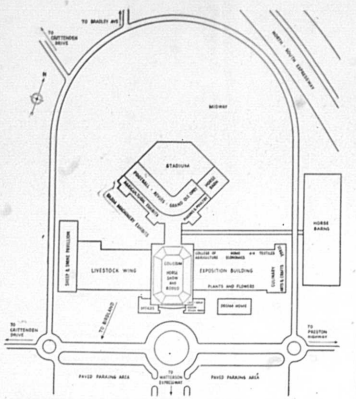
The Kentucky Experiment Station agronomy department said this week that "while it is possible leaf and stem diseases, leaf-hopper insects and boron deficiency may be contributing to a certain amount of the trouble, it appears the major portion of the difficulty is the result of water soaked soil."

Soils normally considered well-drained, especially in western Kentucky, have become water-soaked, the agronomists noted. Alfalfa is adapted to well drained soil and will not thrive on poorly-drained or water-soaked soil.

Stands probably will recover when rainfall decreases, if the stand is on normally well-drained land, the agronomists believe. For that reason, farmers should not destroy a stand which now appears useless.

Mow the recovered alfalfa when it blooms, the specialists say; and check the soil for potassium content; potassium may have been leached out by the heavy rains; if the soil is deficient, topdress with muriate or high potassium fertilizer.

In rainfall-deficient years, farmers planted alfalfa on land which normally is poorly drained and having good results. Return of normal or excessive rainfall therefore causes trouble.



Clip this out and use it as your guide to the 1957 Kentucky State Fair, with the compliments of this newspaper.

Scald vegetables before freezing

That there is confusion among some housewives, as to whether blanching of vegetables must be done before freezing or canning, is seen in the number of telephone calls made to Extension foods specialists at the University of Kentucky.

All vegetables to be frozen must be blanched or scalded to halt the action of enzymes that would otherwise cause loss of food value, flavor, color and texture, says Mrs. Pearl Haak, UK canning authority.

She recommends blanching a small amount of the vegetable at a time in a wire basket or cheese cloth. Use a gallon of boiling water to a pint or pound of vegetable, so that boiling will not stop when the vegetable is lowered into it, or so that it will resume boiling quickly.

After the recommended time for scalding, chill the vegetables in ice water, drain well and pack for freezing immediately. It takes about as long to cool vegetables in ice water as to blanch them in boiling water.

Here are the recommended minutes for scalding, depending on the size of vegetables:

Lima and green beans, 2 to 3 minutes; broccoli and cauliflower, 3 minutes; corn on the cob, 7 to 11 minutes; whole kernel corn, 4 minutes; cream style corn, add ¼ cup water to 1 cup of corn and bring to boil; kale, turnip, mustard or spinach greens, 1 to 2 minutes; okra, 3 to 4 minutes, and summer squash cut in ½-inch slices, 3 minutes.

Vegetables that are to be canned may be packed raw into glass jars or tin cans, or they may be prebested and packed hot. Raw food should be packed tightly in the jar as it shrinks during processing; hot food should be packed fairly loosely and should be at or near the boiling point when places in the jar. All vegetables except tomatoes should then be processed in a steam pressure canner.

Tomatoes (an acid food) may be processed in the hot water bath canner.

Transplant evergreens during September

September is one of the best months of the year for the transplanting of evergreens, according to N. R. Elliott, Extension horticulturist at the University of Kentucky. They are in a resting period at this time, and so can become established in their new home, ready to start growing in the spring.

Dig the holes early, so that good soil may be substituted for poor soil, and fall rains soften the soil at the edges of the hole, says Elliott. Instead of using manure at planting time, use about two double handfuls of commercial fertilizer, mixed well with the soil, to pack around the roots of each plant. The hole should be deep enough so the filled hole will be about 2 inches deeper than the surrounding area. The basin thus formed will catch and hold water, and also be a good place for an application of old hay, straw or well-rotted manure.

In setting the evergreen, look the plant over carefully to see which side is the best looking and better shaped, then set that side toward the front. It is also advisable to set young trees so most of their branches are toward the prevailing wind.

Transplanted evergreens need liberal amounts of water once a week until hard freezing weather come, then once a month when the temperature returns to above freezing. Evergreens that have been set as long as two or three years should also be watered regularly now to build a reserve moisture for the winter.

"Wickland," known as the "home of three governors," stands among stately trees near Bardstown. The estate once belonged to Dr. Walter Brashear, the Bardstown and Lexington surgeon who performed the first successful hip-joint amputation on record.

Cumberland Gap National Historical Park, 20,184 acres covering parts of three States, was designated a Federal area Sept. 14, 1955.

Southeast of Winchester is the site of Eskippakithiki, an Indian village from about 1718 to 1754, believed to have been the last one in Kentucky.

Keeneland Race Course, Lexington, was patterned after the great English race courses where the chief considerations were the sport of racing and the improvement of thoroughbred stock.

Recipe of the week

Peanut butter cookies are a natural for the school lunch box. They rate tops in flavor and they keep well.

This kind of cookie has advantages for the housewife, too, say UK Extension foods specialists. Any shortening on hand may be used with the peanut butter, and the cookies may be quickly made into balls for baking, rather than being rolled.

Peanut Butter Cookies

1¼ c sifted flour

½ t baking powder

¾ t soda

¼ t salt

½ c shortening

½ c peanut butter

½ c sugar

1 egg

2 T evaporated milk or cream

Sift together the first four ingredients. Cream shortening, peanut butter and sugar. Add egg and beat well. Stir in evaporated milk or cream, add dry ingredients and mix. Roll dough in 1-inch balls, place on greased baking sheet, and flatten with a fork dipped in flour. Bake in moderate oven, 375 degrees, for 10 minutes. Remove from pan at once. Makes 3½ to 4 dozen.

Keep swine cool on way to market

Get all the profits to which you're entitled in shipping hogs to market, says Grady Sellards, Kentucky Agricultural Extension Service swine specialist. Give them a cool, comfortable ride.

Use sand for bedding, he advises, and wet it down. If the haul is to be long, sprinkle the hogs en route and wet the bedding again. Cracked ice can be put in burlap sacks and suspended above the hogs for cooling purposes, too.

Feed on arrival at market to reduce shrinkage, rather than just prior to loading; use good loading chutes; remove sharp objects from the carrier (bolts and nails that protrude, etc.); load the animals quietly; use clappers for loading rather than clubs, sharp prods, or your feet; avoid crowding; separate boars, stags, and large hogs from small hogs in transit; and watch handling practises (to avoid bruises) in unloading and driving to market pens.
